You, Too, Can Be a Winner in This Year's Oscars!

The Towering Inferno was a disaster — but was it also the best picture of the year?

Is Godfather II a better movie than Godfather I?

The Victoria Times and Radio Station CJVI are giving you a chance to predict the top Oscar winners as selected April 8 with the first prize being a CP Air weekend for two in Hollywood, the home of the stars.

Winner of the contest will be drawn from among those who have correctly predicted the winner of best actor, best actress and best movie of the year.

Three runner-up winners in the drawing will receive dinners for two at The Empress and double passes to an Odeon Theatre.

Oscar winners are announced April 8 and the drawing from among the correct entries will take place April 9.

Best Picture: Godfather II, Chinatown, Towering Inferno, The Conversation, Lenny.

Best Actor: Al Pacino as the heir to a gangster empire in Godfather II, Albert Finney for his portrayal of an offbeat sleuth in Murder on the Orient Express, Dustin Hoffman as Lenny Bruce in Lenny, Jack Nicholson as a cynical private detective in Chinatown and Art Carney for Harry and Tonto.

Best Actress: Faye Dunaway for Chinatown, Ellen Burstyn for Alice Doesn't Live Here Any More, Valerie Perrine as the wife of Lenny Bruce in Lenny, Gena Rowlands for A Woman Under The Influence and Diahann Carrol for Claudine.

Favorites in the race for best picture are Godfather II and Chinatown, which each got 11 nominations and Towering Inferno with 8 nominations.

Lenny and The Conversation are regarded as longshots but the final verdict is in the hands of the 3,200 voters of The Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences and the results of the ballot have been quite startling on occasion.

Studio politics always plays a role in the voting and some observers are concerned about a possible split ballot between Godfather II and Chinatown, both by Paramount Pictures, which would permit one of the other three nominees to win in a close vote.

However, both Godfather II and Chinatown have won high critical acclaim.

Godfather II is a personal triumph for filmmaker Francis Ford Coppola who received a record five nominations, including best director. But two of the nominations are for his work in The Conversation, which is a rival to Godfather II in the best picture category.

Lenny, the biography of tough-talking comedian Lenny Bruce, is regarded as another high achievement by Dustin Hoffman, who won an Oscar as best actor in The Graduate.

Sentimental favorite for best actor is Art Carney, who teamed up with Jackie Gleason on television for many years. However, the critics generally have been louder in their praises for the other four nominees.

Al Pacino has the advantage of being the featured player in Godfather II, which has been a winner at the box office.

Nicholson and Finney have been nominated before. Nicholson has been nominated for best actor and best supporting actor in years past while Finney gained fame in the title role of Tom Jones, best movie of 1963.

There is no clear favorite in the best actress category and the voting figures to be close. Faye Dunaway, who was nominated for Bonnie and Clyde in 1967, has come up with an even better performance in Chinatown, another winner at the box office.

Gena Rowlands has won extravagant praise from some critics for A Woman Under The Influence but Ellen Burstyn, Valerie Perrine and Diahann Carrol have also been mentioned prominently by the critics.

Two years ago The Godfather swept the boards.

The Times-CJVI contest is not open to employees of the two companies or their immediate families.

GROWN MEN WEEP

Fear and Despair Mount in Saigon

By PHILIP McCOMBS
Washington Post

SAIGON — There is despair, fear and outrage here. People are hoarding rice and packing their belonging to flee, they don't know where or when. Grown men are weeping.

There are no firm indications Saigon itself will soon be attacked. But people and officials here are shocked into numbness by the vast magnitude of what has happened to their country.

"When my dad heard about the abandonment of the highlands, he broke down weeping," said a secretary. "He told me the last time he wept was when the country was partitioned in 1954."

The movement of refugees out of the highlands and in the extreme northern part of the country is of Biblical proportions, almost beyond mental grasp. It seems almost everyone here has some relative, somewhere, to worry about.

So far only a trickle of these refugees has reached Saigon, but people here are desperately concerned about what can happen if that trickle becomes a flood, and if the flood is accompanied by possible defeated and unruly government soldiers.

People are also concerned that if roads to Saigon from the Mekong Delta food-growing region are cut off in the next few weeks, food shortages could rapidly develop here that might lead to civil disorder.

Even so, Saigon seems to be considered the best place to be right now.

"I brought my family down from Da Lat," said one man. "To tell the truth, if I thought the (National Liberation) Front would take over in one clean sweep, I would have stayed. What concerns me is the interim period — the period of disorder when there is no government."

In Saigon near midnight Thursday night, a policeman stopped a Western diplomat and extorted 2,000 piasters (about $3).

"It was right in the middle of the downtown area," said another diplomat, "and it makes you wonder, doesn't it?"

Some families are buying quantities of rice and storing them in different parts of the city — in case one section of the city becomes unsafe, they think they may be able to live in another near their second or third cache of rice.

Another theory has it, however, that there's no point in

POWER OUT

A high-flying swan, apparently with bad eyesight, flew into a power line on Carey Road this morning, causing a power failure in the Royal Oak area of Saanich.

The impact of the swan, which died, shorted the power line and B.C. Hydro crews were called out to restore electricity. Power was off in Royal Oak for about an hour.

PSAC Disruptions Just a Beginning?

OTTAWA (CP) — The strikes by federal blue-collar workers that disrupted postal, air and grain-shipping services may have only given the public a small taste of industrial strife to come in the next few months.

With a number of crucial agreements about to expire or now in the process of renegotiation, the potential exists for many more weeks of strikes in those services.

There still is a chance that more walkouts by the 18,600-member general labor and trades group will occur, despite the tentative agreement reached Wednesday between the Public Service Alliance and the government after a month of selective strikes.

Although alliance leaders hope for ratification of this week's settlement, there has been widespread opposition expressed among union members and the vote is expected to be close.

In Winnipeg, members of PSAC today rejected the proposed contract by an 81-percent majority. A spokesman for the local members said the vote was 158 to 37 against the proposed settlement with the federal treasury board.

But even if the dispute involving the laborers and tradesmen is finished, there remains the likelihood of walkouts by letter carriers and postal clerks and the possibility of strikes by airport firefighters, airline machinists, longshoremen and grain handlers.

Conciliation hearings in the contract dispute between 16,000 letter carriers and the treasury board, the government's collective bargaining arm, began Friday with the two sides far apart on wages, the main issue.

The letter carriers want a $2.50-an-hour raise while the treasury board has offered $1.15 in stages over four years. The workers now earn $4.44 an hour after three years service.

Should the parties fail to reach an agreement, a strike could come within a month.

The 22,000 inside postal workers, including mail sorters and clerks, are just beginning negotiations but an atmosphere of militancy and hostility between the union and government prevent an easy solution to that dispute.

A strike by the postal workers could come in the next two months.

Contracts for 1,470 airport firefighters, who held illegal strikes last spring, end March 31. Walkouts by those employees who are Public Ser-

4 CANADIANS $120,000 WINNERS

Four Canadians, three from Ontario and one from Alberta won prizes of about $120,000 each with Irish Hospital Sweepstakes tickets on Southwark Star, winner of today's Lincolnshire Handicap in Doncaster, England.

Two Canadians won about $48,000 on second-place Flying Nelly and four Canadians won about $24,000 each with tickets on Dawlish, who finished third.

$36,430 For Lauk Deputies

The appointment of two associate deputy ministers to the department of economic development in the provincial government was announced Friday.

Jack McKeown will head the business and industrial development branch and J. R. Meredith will assume responsibilities of senior policy adviser to Economic Development Minister Gary Lauk.

Salary listed for each position is $36,430.

The appointments follow provisions for a second associate deputy approved in cabinet orders released Friday, and the resignation of former associate deputy Les Hempsall last month.

Also announced Friday was the appointment of Ronald F. Bone as vice-chairman of the Labor Relations Board, a $36,430 salary position.

'ENLIGHTENMENT' FOR VICTORIA

About 200 people turned out to The Empress hotel Friday night for a symposium marking "the dawn of the age of enlightenment."

The what?

Sign Says It All

A big sign hoisted high on a crane at one end of the Johnson Street bridge today likely said it all for a lot of taxpayers.

In bold letters it called for continuous bargaining "NOW" to settle the strike-lockout which has idled 1,800 civic employees and crippled the Greater Victoria school system.

It was signed: "Taxpayers with Common Sense."

"There are no sides being taken," said Robert Gillespie, one of the sign organizers, "we just want full negotiations — now."

No talks are scheduled in the eight-week dispute.

The bridge, which is raised and likely to remain so over the weekend, is one visible aspect of disruptions the contract fight has produced.

"They're like little kids — one saying 'I want it up' and the other saying 'I want it down'," said a disgusted Gillespie.

"This nonsense should stop," said Karl Fritz, whose firm provided the crane to raise the giant sign high over the harbor.

City police told the organizers they would have to move the 25-ton crane and sign by 11 a.m.

Meanwhile, another irate city resident feels the city of Victoria is trying to "squeeze an extra two bits" out of city taxpayers by ticketing cars in city parkades.

Mrs. Terry Balla of Mary's Patio Grill on Johnson Street parked her car in the Johnson Street parkade Friday without buying the 25-cent permit.

She said today she has been parking there without a permit for the past two weeks and no one bothered her, but when she got back to her car Friday she found a $2 parking ticket on her windshield.

"I just don't feel like paying that 25 cents for the permit. We have enough to put up with without city hall trying to squeeze an extra two bits out of us."

"Businesses downtown have had to pay a fortune to have their garbage hauled away, money that we won't get off our taxes and now city hall is moving in and giving tickets to cars just to get their 25 cents," Mrs. Balla said.

P.O. LOSS SOARS

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office deficit more than doubled to $177.2 million in 1973-74 despite increased revenue of $28 million, it was reported Friday.

The annual report for the year ended March 31, 1974, said total revenue rose five per cent to $591 million but costs shot up to $768.3 million, an increase of $114.2 million over the previous year.

The report was filed Friday in the Commons by Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey.

It said rising salaries accounted for $83.8 million of the cost increase. Transportation costs rose $13.7 million and spending on machinery and equipment went up $17.6 million.

Social Unrest On Way: CLC

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Labor Congress predicts that social unrest will continue in the coming 12 months, fuelled by high inflation and unemployment in a stagnant economy.

The 1.9-million-member labor group, in its annual brief to the federal cabinet, calls on the government to respond to the economic situation with increased tax reductions to low and middle-income Canadians.

The 20,000-word brief, to be presented Monday to Prime Minister Trudeau and members of his cabinet, says there is a strong possibility the country will have an inflation rate of about 12 per cent accompanied by an unemployment rate of seven per cent in the coming year.

The congress said the wages of all workers, both organized and unorganized, should be fully indexed in relation to increases in the consumer price index.

It predicted virtually no real increase in economic growth in the next 12 months and a continuation in the decline of exports.

The labor body reiterated its support for a form of guaranteed annual income but said it should not replace social insurance programs such as unemployment insurance and government pension plans.

"The integration of unemployment insurance into a one-shot social security scheme as envisaged by some advocates of the guaranteed annual income would be, in our view, a mistake," the brief said.

NEWS BRIEFS

Biggest Tax Break In History for U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Senate voted 60-29 Friday to give Americans the biggest tax break in history, a $33.1 billion package of tax rebates, payroll withholding reductions, business incentives and social security bonuses intended to help pull the nation out of recession.

The bill now goes to a House-Senate conference to iron out differences with a $19.9 billion House bill. The conference is scheduled to begin Monday.

Snow Strands 800

SAPPORO, Japan (AP) — About 800 passengers spent their second night in stranded trains today after four feet of wet snow paralysed railway services in eastern Hokkaido, the northermost main island of Japan, officials reported. Japan national Railway cancelled 129 trains and reported 13 were stranded.

UIC Prosecuted 125

VANCOUVER (CP)— The Unemployment Insurance Commission prosecuted 125 British Columbia residents in 1974 for various crimes involving unemployment payments.

U.K. Inflation 20%

LONDON (AP) — Britain's inflation rate, one of the highest in the world, hovered around a record 20 per cent in February for the second straight month, the government said Friday. The government blamed higher prices for clothing, bread, other foodstuffs, used autos and candy.

NDP Out to Destroy VSE: President

VANCOUVER (CP) — Relations between the Vancouver investment industry and the B.C. government appear to be reaching the boiling point.

In a strongly-worded statement Friday, Vancouver Stock Exchange president Cyril White said:

"I am satisfied that the attorney-general (Alex Macdonald) is attempting to destroy the Vancouver Stock Exchange as part of the objectives of the 1969 Waffle manifesto, to which both he and Premier Barrett subscribed."

White was referring to the document issued by a group of left-wing New Democrats (the Waffle group), which called for a restoration of "radical socialism" in the NDP, national planning of investment and public ownership of the means of production in Canada.

"Why don't they (the NDP government) be honest and admit what they are doing, instead of maligning the VSE in shotgun attacks? I am becoming scared about what's going on here," White said.

The VSE president was reacting to statement attributed earlier in the week to Macdonald, who criticized the "Monte Carlo goings-on."

Responding to the attorney-general's statement that some of the junior stocks on the VSE are not "legitimate ventures for the public to invest in," White said:

"More than 90 per cent of the stocks listed on the VSE since the NDP has formed the government were first approved by the attorney-general's department. I'm talking about the former interim listings and over-the-counter stocks that are now fully listed or make up the curb exchange."

White also took exception to Macdonald's statement that he had appointed the VSE's two public governors (David Huberman and Peter Stanley) to a listing committee and that they would report both to Macdonald and the VSE.

He said that Huberman and Stanley represent the public at large, not the attorney-general, on the VSE's board of governors. "They cannot report both to the VSE and the attorney-general — for Mr. Macdonald to suggest otherwise is shocking," he said.

UIC Wants Its Cash Back

VANCOUVER (CP) — A former Campbell River alderman, defeated last November, will have to return the $125 in unemployment benefits she has received in the last five weeks, Tony Strachan, an Unemployment Insurance Commission spokesman, said Friday.

Strachan said Ollie Penman was never eligible for benefits and should never have been required to make a total $28 deduction from her salary for insurance premium. The district of Campbell River was mistaken in its belief that an alderman is insurable, he added.

Mrs. Penman began paying premiums from the time council received a salary increase to $2,000 a year, putting council members above the minimum set by UIC for collection of premiums.

Mrs. Penman said she has "no argument" with the ruling "as long as they return the premiums they deducted from me."

Strachan said the question of return of premiums was a matter between Mrs. Penman and Revenue Canada-Taxation.

A spokesman for Revenue Canada-Taxation said the branch will investigate the case and any over-payments will be returned.

Any other elected official who has had premiums deducted will receive the same treatment if it is brought to the tax branch's attention, he said.

The Canada Pension Plan Act stipulates elected officials are not considered employees in the strict sense of the word, and are therefore not eligible for benefits, Strachan explained.

Fresh Province Falls To Communist Push

Times News Services

Tank-led Communist troops over-ran another provincial capital and district town in central South Vietnam today.

In Saigon, the Viet Cong command issued a call to arms almost identical to the appeal for a general offensive during the Tet attacks of 1968 and the Easter assaults of 1972.

Military spokesmen said Communists took over Gia Nghai provincial capital, 100 miles northeast of Saigon and further north forced government defenders out of Khanh Duong district capital, 225 miles from the capital.

In the far northern quarter of the country, Communist gunners continued to pound Hue and its outlying suburbs, hurrying the southbound exodus of 250,000 civilians, field reports said.

U.S. officials termed the Communist drive bigger than the bloody Tet offensive of 1968. Saigon officials ordered the city's milita into a "state of alarm and readiness."

In Washington, state department officials say the United States is considering a declaration that the 1973 Paris peace agreements on South Vietnam have become inoperative because of the worsening situation.

These officials believe Communist forces will try to establish their own visible South Vietnamese government in Hue, instead of following past practice of vanishing into the jungle.

The Paris accords limited the amount of aid the U.S. could provide the Saigon regime and the number of troops and equipment that North Vietnam could bring into the South to one-to-one replacements for what already was there.

Fighting also was reported fierce in South Vietnam's neighbor, Cambodia, amid word from reliable sources in Washington and Phnom Penh that Cambodian President Lon Nol will quit soon in a bid to bring peace to his country after five years of warfare with Communist-led insurgents.

buying rice when one might have to flee.

"Everybody is talking about fleeing Saigon," said an office worker. "But nobody thinks about the fact that there is no place to flee after Saigon."

Many families are said to be packing belongings in large rice bags rather than suitcases — the long experience of war has taught people that the rice bags are more convenient on long and difficult journeys.

Children are being taught what to do in case they are lost. They are learning to recite the names and addresses of parents and relatives.

There is rage at President Nguyen Van Thieu and high government officials for letting things come to this pass. And there is the absolutely firm, but so far unsubstantiated, conviction that Thieu has made a deal with the Communists.

This view is being shared now even by fairly high-ranking and sober government officials. But nobody seems to know anything for sure.

"The abandonment of all those towns and cities is government treason," said an office clerk. "They are stabbing the soldiers and the people in the back. How can they abandon so many towns and cities so fast?"

There is undoubtedly some justification for worrying about a breakdown in civil der here, but analysts tend to doubt that Saigon is a major military target at this point.

"They don't want to attack Saigon," said one Western analyst. "They'll cut it off and choke it. It's the civil disorders that they expect to bring it down."

Escapers Spit At Life Terms

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two British Columbia Penitentiary prisoners spat at the judge from the prisoner's dock Friday as they were sentenced to life terms for attempted murder.

Mr. Justice A. B. Macfarlane told Richard Beeman, 25, and Claire Wilson, 24, that their behavior was evidence they have no regard for society or their fellow men.

Robert Moyse, 19, the third man arrested when the trio made their escape from custody Nov. 28 at Cassidy airport in Nanaimo, was sentenced to 15 years for attempted murder.

The three were charged with attempted murder of deputy sheriff Gilbert Perry, RCMP constable Paul Cloutier and Ben Dixon, a Cassidy farmer. They were also charged with wounding deputy sheriff Jerrold Ockey and with forcible seizure of Francis Dixon.

Herring Boat No. 9 Founders

One herring boat sank and another capsized Friday bringing to nine the number of fishing boats that have foundered in waters around Vancouver Island since the herring season opened six days ago.

A Ministry of Transport official in Vancouver said this morning investigations into the mishaps would be held, but that each would be treated separately. He described the investigations as routine whenever there is a marine disaster.

He said there was no suggestion the ministry will be looking into charges the mishaps may be attributed to fishermen overloading their boats with catches.

In the most recent incidents one man is missing and presumed drowned after a 36-foot fishing boat out of Seattle bound for Alaska capsized in heavy seas eight mile off Courtenay Friday afternoon. A second crew member, Thomas Pomeroy, 44, of Ferndale, Wash., was picked up by an American boat and is in fair condition in hospital in Comox.

The capsized boat, still floating, has been towed to safe harbor on Texada Island.

RCMP in Powell River identified the missing man as Stewart Nelson, 40, of Bellingham.

A Pacific Rescue Centre spokesman said winds in the area were gusty with 12 to 14-foot waves at the time.

Later, at about 9:30 p.m. Friday, the 129-foot Pacific Venture, an ex-U.S. Navy ship converted as a packing boat, rolled over and sank near Estevan Point at about the midway mark on the west coast of Vancouver Island. It was loaded with 250 tons of herring.

The six-man crew was picked up by the fishing vessel Wind Song 8 and it is believed has been taken to Tofino. No injuries have been reported.

The Rescue Centre spokesman said four men have been reported missing and 41 saved in the week-long string of disasters that have inflicted the heaviest toll on the herring fleet in years. All of the boats except one were Canadian.

By comparison last year there were only three or four sinkings.

The spokesman said that in at least two of the recent sinkings the cause may be attributed to a combinaion of inclement weather and overloading.

Strikes

vice Alliance members could have a severe impact on air travel.

The strikes last spring began in British Columbia where the firefighters wanted pay comparable to that of municipal firemen, but eventually hit nearly every major port and, if an agreement is not reached, will soon be eligible to strike.

In the private sector — but under federal jurisdiction — several sets of agreements have to be renegotiated.

About 2,000 longshoremen in St. Lawrence River ports, including Montreal, now are considering a concilation report and, if an agreement is not reached, will soon be eligible to strike.

Montreal grain handlers are among 600 general work force employees of the National Harbors Board who now are bargaining or a new contract. Their last agreement expired last Dec. 31. A spokesman for the board said Friday talks are proceeding reasonably well.

Air Canada faces a new round of negotiations with its 7,000 machinists whose contract ends April 10 while CP Air also must settle with their 1,300 machinsts in the next few months. The CP Air machinsist's present agreement ends May 25.

Civic Workers Mass

VANCOUVER (CP) — Thousands of Greater Vancouver civic workers left their jobs Friday afternoon to express displeasure with the way contract negotiations are going.

About 1,500 of them huddled at Vancouver city hall for nearly two hours in bitter weather listening to a parade of speakers.

Civic services were disrupted.

The workers from seven municipalities involved in the Greater Vancouver dispute and striking Surrey workers carried a variety of signs. Most called for a return to the bargaining table.

One wag arrived on a unicycle wearing a sign that read "Please give us a raise so I can afford a second wheel."

Following the rally some workers went back to work while others took an extended weekend.

The biting cold failed to put a damper on the rally and workers heard Syd Thompson, president of the Vancouver and District Labor Council call for an escalation in job action.

Thompson said "maybe you should consider taking over" the city hall building and the administration. Asked to clarify his remarks later, Thompson brushed reporters aside and said "I have not the time to interpret it."

IWA SEEKS $1

VANCOUVER (CP) — The International Woodworkers of America decided in Vancouver to ask for a wage increase of $1 an hour in a 12-month contract this year.

The decision, made by 200 delegates from the three British Columbia regions, overrides a decision made in February by the Vancouver and New Westminster locals to seek a $1.50-an-hour increase.

Syd Thompson, Vancouver local president, said some of the delegates at the meeting wanted to seek a $1.50 raise. However, most present "decided it didn't make too much sense to ask for more" because of last year's settlement and COLA clause.

the weather

A few rainshowers persisted over the south coast overnight while snowflurries lingered in interior valleys. The storm that brought rain and strong winds to the south coast Friday is now lying off the Washington State coast. The low was weakening rapidly and drifting slowly east. A weak high pressure ridge will build over the southern portions of the province tonight with partial clearing expected in most regions. The next Pacific system is forecast to bring some rain to the south coast on Sunday.

Island Bird Check-List Grows . . . and Grows

The Chamber of Commerce has some new evidence to support its familiar slogan "follow the Birds to Victoria."

According to Jack Williams and Jeremy Tatum of the Victoria Natural History Society and co-compilers of the latest checklist of Victoria birds, more than 280 different kinds have now been recorded here — about a dozen more than in the previous list published in 1968.

Covering an area of southern Vancouver Island lying east of a line drawn between Ladysmith and Otter Point, and including the Canadian Gulf Islands and offshore waters, the checklist lists all the species that have been positively identified here over a 22-year period by competent observers.

While the bare statistics reveal a modest jump in the number of species now accepted for the list, the rise becomes more significant when a half-a-dozen or more accidentals listed in 1968 and now dropped are considered. Apparently the records of these accidentals failed to survive the rigors of time.

Also among the casualties in 1974 was the Grey Partridge. An alien, introduced here several years ago, the Grey Partridge is now considered extinct on Vancouver Island, the last one reported about two years ago near Pat Bay Airport.

Also dropped were four names that were casualties of taxonomic manipulations. Audubon's and Myrtle Warblers disappeared to become the Yellow-rumped Warbler while the Yellow-shafted and Red-shafted Flicker succumbed to Northern Flicker. And a couple more species — the Buff-breasted Sandpiper and Pomarine Jaegar — recorded on the 1968 list also appear to have been victims of too close investigation.

So, with all these cuts, how come an increase?

We must look to names like Keith Taylor, Ron Satterfield and Vic Goodwill, Victoria bird students who take their hobby seriously. With these three on the watch, and a covey of others like them, Victoria's list couldn't do anything else but grow.

Leading the newcomers was a bevy of exotic beauties, three lovely white herons. There was the Cattle Egret — wanderer from Africa by way of South America and the United States — and the Snowy and Great Egrets both indigenous Americans who crossed into Vancouver Island in the past three years.

And of course there's the new gulls, three of them. Mind you, one of them — Thayer's came to us as a result of the same scientific game of musical chairs that cost us a warbler and a flicker earlier. Thayer's Gull was formerly considered a subspecies of the Herring Gull; it now stands alone — for the moment at least — as a full-fledged (sorry about that) species.

There's no stigma attached to the other two new gulls — the Black-headed and the Little Gull — which grace our list. They are bona fide species in their own right which wandered our way, probably from Siberia and western Pacific.

And, of course, there were those two southerners that turned up unexpectedly a couple of years ago. One, Costa's Hummingbird, checked into a Cadboro Bay garden to become a first for Canada while not far away, in Gyro Park, a Tropical Kingbird wrote its own kind of Canadian ornithological history. This last continues to be a source of conflict among local ornithologists; some believing we haven't got good enough evidence to make the record stick.

As the saying goes "You can't tell the players without a program" and Victoria's new checklist is your program.

At 10 cents a shot, you can't go wrong. They should be available in the Provincial Museum Book Shop soon.

Open Tory MP Revolt Over Support in Que.

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — The Conservative Party split openly in the Commons Friday on whether to concentrate its efforts where it is strongest—in Alberta—or try to win more support in Quebec.

Outgoing Tory leader Robert Stanfield and most Tory MPs voted to support the Liberal government rather than risk weakening the party's position in Alberta in the current provincial election campaign.

The issue which brought the split into the open was a Social credit motion condemning the Liberal adminstration for failing to deal effectively with inflation on the grounds that it is an international problem, and calling for adoption of Socred proposals to combat the effects of inflation, including a subsidy to Canadian consumers buying Canadian food produce.

There were between 80 and 85 Conservatives in the House during the debate on the motion, but when the vote was taken, only 53 Tories stood up openly to oppose it.

Several members refused to follow Stanfield on the grounds that he was abandoning his party's anti-inflation position and alienating potential Conservative supporters in Quebec and other parts of Canada.

The vote was an illustration of the quandary facing the party at present.

Already some Conservatives, including potential leadership candidate Allan Lawrence (PC—Northumberland-Durham), have declared publicly that the party should forget about trying to court Quebec voters and concentrate on areas of Canada where it is strongest.

John Reynolds (PC—Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) and Frank Oberle (PC—Prince George-Peace River) voted against their party and for the Scoial credit motion.

Otto Jelinek (PC—High Park-Humber Valley) sat in his seat and refused to vote at all.

The remainder of the Conservative MPs stayed out of the House when the vote was taken.

But Stanfield and other party officers in the House hadn't bothered to check with Conservative backbenchers, and many, according to Reynolds, were upset over the position the leader was taking.

He said he wouldn't vote for "the God-damned Liberals" on an issue over which his party had been attacking the government for months and said it was "stupid" of the Tories to support the Liberals in the vote.

Reynolds said that the consumer food subsidy was nothing more than the price indexing which his party has been advocating since before the 1974 election.

WELFARE MONEY BUILT FORTUNE

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — A ranch owner who used $3,539 in welfare payments to create a fortune of more than $400,000 will spend 45 weekends in jail after being convicted of fraud.

David Madsen, 30, also received a $1,000 fine and was ordered to repay Burnaby municipality the $3,539 when he appeared before County Court Judge J. B. Hinds.

Madsen will start his 90-day jail sentence next Saturday when he is to report either to a detention centre in Kamloops, or the jail at 100-Mile-House.

While on welfare in Burnaby, Madsen moved to the Cariboo without reporting a change of address. Once there, he started to buy several parcels of land for speculation.

Defence lawyer James Taylor said Madsen was on welfare legitimately, but erred in not taking himself off welfare rolls.

Taylor told the court that most of Madsen's assets are in property, including a ranch worth $300,000 as of last September. Value has probably declined to about $250,000 at present, he added.

New Search For Tanks Of Chlorine

VANCOUVER (CP) — Seaspan International Ltd., North Vancouver tugboat operator, announced Friday it will renew the search for four chlorine-laden railway tank cars that toppled off an overturned barge into Georgia Strait on Feb. 19.

An electronic search of Malaspina Strait, employing naval and environment department vessels for the tanks, each carrying 85 tons of potentially deadly liquid chlorine, ended last week in failure.

The Seaspan search, which likely will employ sonar—underwater sound waves—and divers, if necessary, will be concentrated near the Welcome Pass area, about seven miles southeast of the area where the unsuccessful government search took place.

Victoria Press Seeks Firm Financial Footing

A number of proposals aimed at reducing operating expenses of Victoria Press Limited and putting the company into a better financial position have been submitted to the Joint Council of Newspaper Unions, Victoria Press general manager J. C. Melville said in a statement Friday.

Roger Stonebanks, co-chairman of the Joint Council, confirmed receipt of the letter from management and said the proposals would be studied by the five unions which comprise the council.

Melville said of the proposals, "We knew that we would face heavy abnormal expenses when we resumed publication after the long shutdown last year. We are determined to bring the two newspapers (the Victoria Times and The Daily Colonist) into a healthy operating position as soon as possible and have asked the unions to help us do so by foregoing at least temporarily some of the benefits contained in the current contracts."

Neither Melville nor Stonebanks would comment on the details of the proposals. They said the letter dealt with internal problems and the matter would be treated as confidential.

MONARCHY ENDS

ADDIS ABABA (AP) — The leftist military government has abolished Ethiopia's 3,000-year-old monarchy, which began with the Queen of Sheba and ended with 82-year-old Emperor Haile Selassie.

Selassie was deposed Sept. 12 and his eldest son, Asfa Wossen, 58, was named crown prince.

But the government said in a brief statement broadcast Friday that Wossen's appointment has been annulled and all royal ranks abolished.

An Opportunity Missed

Rejection by the regional bargaining group of a non-binding provincial industrial inquiry commission in the two-month CUPE strike-lockout was thoughtless and guarantees a longer strike. Capital Regional Board Chairman Jim Campbell's argument that CUPE's wage demands are so high that any compromise effected by a commission would work against the taxpayer's interest conveniently dodges the issue. The public wants an end to this two-month dispute and the regional group has a responsibility to explore every avenue that might solve the current impasse.

Government industrial inquiry commissions tend to favor labor's position in the eyes of many employers. But recommendations are non-binding, which means the region or union could reject a settlement not in their interest. In refusing to even consider a commission, after CUPE has accepted it, the municipalities are rejecting what is essentially due process under provincial labor laws. If we have reached the point in this province where one level of government so mistrusts another that compromises are impossible, both municipal and provincial realms should re-examine their positions.

While the region is damned if it rejects the commission and dammed if it accepts it, a public employer has a greater responsibility than a private employer to achieve a settlement. This is not a dispute between a company and its employees. It is a mess that has halted garbage collection, endangered health, and disrupted the education of nearly 30,000 area school children. For either side to leave one stone unturned in solving the dispute would be remiss. In rejecting the provincial inquiry commission — a small hope perhaps — the regional bargaining group has acted irresponsibly to the detriment of the community it was elected to serve.

And then we must consider Greater Victoria School Board's action in curtailing school hours because of the janitors' strike. The Times withheld comment on partial school closures because it appeared the board's action was reasonable at the time. But it is increasingly obvious, especially with spring weather, that schools could be opened on a full-time basis. School Board Chairman William Ross even admits obstacles are not insurmountable. Yet now the board says it will continue with its reduced hours policy until at least March 27. Keeping the schools partially closed on the basis of garbage collection and heating problems begins to look like a canard to force a settlement with striking janitors. If this is the case the board is wrong. Reduced hours for secondary school students plus a prolonged strike could mean a poor academic year. Chamber of Commerce President Robert McHaffie is correct; schools can and should be opened on a full-time basis.

The citizens of this area have had enough of CUPE pickets blocking bridge access, mass picketing of schools, and a failure of the regional bargaining group to explore every avenue towards a settlement. Since the region won't touch a non-binding provincial inquiry commission, the ball is in their court. A new regional initiative and an attitude of compromise on CUPE's part is needed. This impasse cannot be allowed to continue for another three months, as Mayor Peter Pollen has all too realistically suggested it might.

Metchosin Needs More Transit

Esquimalt MLA Jim Gorst's suggestion that South West Coach Lines Ltd. be deprived of all its transit franchises on the southern end of Vancouver Island if it doesn't maintain its Happy Valley-Metchosin run (reportedly losing $3,000 a month) makes about as much sense as amputating an arm to treat a finger with a splinter in it.

Who then would step in to provide daily transit service to Metchosin, Sooke and the Colwood-Langford areas?

While B.C. Hydro has increased the frequency of bus service in the metropolitan Victoria area, added a couple of crosstown express buses, and bought out the profitable Vancouver Island Coach Lines, it doesn't seem very eager to jump into the marginally money-making runs to the boondocks.

"There is no justification for a company holding a public licence to retain only that which is good and profitable to them to the detriment of the travelling public," said Gorst at a public meeting. He suggested comparisons with that callous super-conglomerate, the CPR, which got a large land grant to provide perpetual rail service on the Island.

That was B.C. Hydro's attitude too, once upon a time. The Crown corporation was trying to foist the transit system onto the municipalities it served. Happily the attitude changed with the change in provincial governments two years ago — now it's accepted that public transit should be financed with public money, like highways or sewers.

The Metchosin area needs some form of public transit. With 20,000 residents in this fastest-growing of Victoria region communities, out at the end of a bottlenecked highway already overloaded with private vehicles, there's no question about the crying need. Service should be improved, not discontinued. The bus run needs to be made attractive and convenient to potential users.

The government which Gorst represents has a parallel before it in the case of the Surrey-White Rock region south of Vancouver, where B.C. Hydro and the municipalities share a subsidy to provide good bus service.

Instead of berating South West Coach Lines, the Esquimalt MLA might better serve his constituents by buttonholing Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer and asking him either to get B.C. Hydro to step in, or send South West a little of the $30 million transit subsidy which the extra two cents gasoline tax is going to raise this year in B.C.

Manipulation Machine And How to Wreck It

Nurtured on maple syrup dutifully ladled out by our politicians and historians, we Canadians like to bask in our progressive liberal image. In fact we can be a rather mean bunch, ever ready to support almost any authoritarian measures our governments care to foist on us.

As U.S. sociologist Martin Lipsett observed, Canada is a nation founded on counter-revolution while the U.S. is founded on revolution.

In 1826 we didn't complain much when hooligans dumped William Lyon Mackenzie's press into Lake Ontario; in 1885 most of the country applauded when Louis Riel was hung, although he is now the subject of operas, stamps and statues. And goodness, how we all rallied around the flag when the government invoked the War Measures Act in the dead of night without benefit of parliamentary debate.

The exercise in resurrecting these uncomfortable facts is not only to show how our consciousness has been manipulated in the past but to set the stage for a study of how we are being manipulated now.

As Richard Gwyn stated on this page last week, the federal government is publishing more material than ever before, the purpose of which is not to inform, but persuade.

The green paper on immigration is a good example. After several drafts were re-worked, to smooth over what might be viewed as rascist statements, according to one report, the document was tabled in the House of Commons Feb. 3.

Among three options listed, two favored curtailing immigration, another preserved the status quo. One astonishing paragraph deserves to be quoted in part.

"The rapid increase during the past few years in the number of sources of significant immigrant movements to this country — with those from certain Asian and Caribbean nations now larger than some traditional European flows — has coincided with the latest and most dynamic phase of post-war urban expansion in Canada. It would be astonishing if there was no concern about the capacity of our society to adjust to a pace of population change that entails novel and distinctive features . . ."

Sorting the wheat from the chaff — no mean task with government documents these days — the government is saying: Look at this, we are getting more brown and black people than white people through immigration and it is causing problems.

Bigots are quick to seize on the most implicit cues from authority. And it wasn't two weeks later, by coincidence or design, that ugly racial incidents between white hooligans and Vancouver's East Indian community began to surface.

Of course the government abhors such incidents — in fact expanded citizenship programs are planned to ease racial tensions — but that still leaves the green paper floating on volatile waters.

And despite all the cant about a public debate, participatory democracy and a choice of immigration policies, the paper is subtly weighted towards curtailing black and brown immigration by appealing to racial fears.

Politicians, such as Vancouver Mayor Art Phillips, take up the cudgels with almost knee jerk glee. Even sadder, complacent editorial writers rationalize discriminatory immigration policies on the basis of employment problems and Canadian society's capacity to absorb, dare we say it, alien life styles.

The only alien life style in Canada's cultural mosaic is one that would appeal to racial or political bigotry.

Throughout history governments have attempted to con, coerce and persuade their peoples. It is nothing new. Yet more worrisome is the ease with which the Canadian people can be led down the yellow brick road of rationalization.

As government increasingly stokes the manipulation machine, we appear to be warming our hands on the flames. Unless the electorate demands less secrecy, smugness and real public debate our reason is in danger of being burned to a crisp. — G.R.O.

Deserving More Than Sneers

OTTAWA — The House of Commons justice committee performed an important service to the country this week by clearing away the tangle of confusion surrounding the origins of the police investigation that ultimately uncovered the dredging scandal.

The confusion stemmed primarily from a series of sloppy, poorly-researched ministerial answers to questions in the House of Commons. If the replies from Transport Minister Jean Marchand over a two-week period were never models of clarity, it has to be said on re-reading all of them that he got the general drift of things right. That is more than Solicitor-General Warren Allmand did.

Careless, Not Corrupt

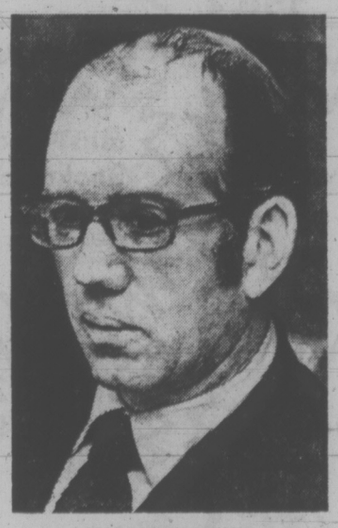
The misleading picture of the origins of this investigation presented to the Commons does appear to be the result of carelessness and a failure to take a proper look at departmental records rather than anything else.

Essentially, the ministry spent two weeks, from March 4 onwards, persuading parliament and public that any delays in getting the investigtion started occurred at the local level in Hamilton and that the federal government in Ottawa did not become involved, or even aware of the situation, until substantially later on. That version turned out in the end, to use a Washington term, to be "inoperative."

When all the facts had finally been dragged out, it became clear that a Hamilton city councillor, who may have had some political motives but who also must be credited with a sense of responsibility, wrote to the federal government in the summer of 1972 and then came to Ottawa personally to lay his misgivings before the authorities. He seems later on to have mistaken Col. J. R. Cameron, a departmental assistant, for the deputy solicitor-general but he brought his suspicions to the right place — the office of the solicitor-general of Canada.

Col. Cameron followed "standard procedure" — and both his actions and the procedures stand up to scrutiny. He called the RCMP to inform them and to seek advice. He then passed the information to the ministry of transport, which had some administrative responsibilities, and informed the Hamilton councillor of his action.

With that, the wheels began to grind. For a while, they ground slowly and erratically while conflicting jurisdictions were sorted out but they did grind. In the end, it seems that like the proverbial mills they ground very finely and impartially. The various delays that took place do not seem surprising to anyone who knows much about governments. An essential point emerges — once the Hamilton councillor had been here, the affair was not forgotten. Men kept gnawing away at it until it was finally drawn fully into the maw of the RCMP.



WARREN ALLMAND
. . . vague and general allegations?

Along with the legal department of the ministry of transport, the Hamilton city government kept gnawing away at the affair and two other Hamiltonians went to the police. By year-end the RCMP had become convinced that an investigation was necessary, it was clear that no one else was making an investigation and they undertook to do so if the ministry of transport would ask them formally. Ministry officials decided they would and one of Marchand's first actions when he took over was to send off the proper letters.

It was not a tidy beginning. For the commencement of what turned out to be a major investigation with far-reaching consequences it had the John Le Carre anti-hero touch.

A good deal of credit goes to the Hamilton city council over this and to the councillor who came to Ottawa to lay his suspicions before the proper authorities. Neither is likely to get much credit, though, from federal ministers who are stung because it was the councillor, James Campbell, who upset their early picture of nothing but purely local inter-police delays.

Allmand made a point at the committee hearing of dismissing Campbell's suspicions, and those of the committee the Hamilton council had set up, as "vague and general allegations" and "the allegations were not very articulate and were vague and general." He did it with a clear sneer in his voice and it was an unbecoming way to treat a man who clearly performed a civic duty.

Honest Men

The former solicitor-general, Jean-Pierre Goyer, was also at pains to do some sneering over Campbell's inability to remember exactly whom he saw here. Allmand made a point too that the original allegations did not stand up.

That may be true but it is unimportant beside the fact that the Hamilton council clearly was right in suspecting things were going on that needed investigation. It was their suspicion and the determination of men like Campbell in seeing that their fears reached the right quarters, that got the investigation started.

When honest men call for the police they cannot reasonably be expected to have formulated the clear-cut accusations that may be possible after a long, painstaking investigation. That is why they have to send for the police. But men who do call for the police when they sense that something is going wrong deserve more than ministerial sneers for their pains.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

By Freeman King

Let's go back to our nurse log and see what else we can find.

Now the bark is beginning to get soft and the spores of the sword fern and the lichonia fern take hold and multiply until they become a beautiful fringe.

Perhaps some seeds of a flowering plant have landed there, carried there by the wind. Perhaps it is the foam flower with its delicate white blossoms. There will be the wonderful little twin flower which will put out sucker roots that take hold. When in bloom, it will give out an odor you will never forget.

Now we find shrubs growing on the log, because a bird has brought seeds along with it, such as the huckleberry and the salal. The birds eat the seeds from some other bush and as the seeds do not break down within the birds, they are expelled. But because the gastric juices of the bird's digestive system broke down the hard shell that enclosed the seed, the seed has become soft, so the tiny seed can break out of its old shell. They take hold and grow in the old log.

Often you can find holly growing in this fashion, but there is something strange about this plant. I have never found one that brought forth berries while growing in the bush. Is this because it never had a chance to get sufficient sunlight, so all it can make is leaves?

We will be sure to find tiny little alders growing on the log, as when this plant is in the seedling stage, it does not look like an alder tree. But if you expose the root system you will see the nitrogen nodules.

Then if there is a maple handy, you will find its seedlings, but they do not look at all like maple. At first it seems there are far too many of these little seedlings growing in one spot, but as time moves along, they thin out for lack of sunlight until there is sufficient room to grow for those which are left.

Now we can also find seedlings of the Douglas fir and red cedar, all growing on our old log.

So it is that a log never dies, for now it has more life in it than when it was growing. There is another world within the old log.

That in turn will help bring forth new life and so replace that which was growing many years ago, and as each plant puts forth its stems and flowers and reaches the time when it has finished for the present, the old leaves and stems will break down and return to the soil. This enables other plants to find a place to grow, all because of the plant that lives on material that other plants provide for them. That is the fungi family, which in turn makes bacteria so that all things may live, even mankind.

If one ponders as he walks about the forest community, he will never find a really old log, for the old giants of trees that grew hundreds of years ago are now a part of the forest floor giving life to new things. This makes it impossible to destroy the green living world, which through the seasons flourishes and gives us faith in the real living world and supplies us with the necessities of life itself, for there cannot be death in the green kingdom, but instead let us say a recycling of all living things.

Harmony Our Guide

Why, with the judicial system of Canada imposing such heavy punishment upon criminals, do we still have an increasing rate of crime? If every man is innocent until proven guilty, why should one man spend months in jail for lack of funds, while another takes a taxi home? Rich and poor, large and small, something has gone terribly wrong with our criminal justice system. Prisons nowadays, with their steel and cement environments, have become hatcheries and universities of crime. Our seeming national obsession with punishment, along with an antiquated court system, have perverted the law itself such that the intent is not so much to dispense justice, as to clear the docket. Whereas we speak of equal protection under law, rich and poor are not equal, no more than Indians and Eskimos are equal to whites.

The growing tide of judicial and governmental bureaucracy, coupled with the vast amount of public apathy, is what is producing the increasing incidence of youthful anarchy, drug abuse, and general disrespect of authority. It is not too late to change this trend. It is up to us, the people, to speak out and the most progressive nations on planet earth, to realize your responsibilities to your fellow man, and through active participation, to act as examples to the rest of the world by resolving the problems here and how. The choice is ours. Anarchy or utopia. Let harmony be our guide, not pride. — Kenneth C. Jones, 1-1331 Pandora.

Tremendous Success

The International Women's Day open house and donation luncheon held at the Emily Carr Arts Centre at 207 Government Street on Friday, March 7, was a tremendous success. The informal opening ceremony in the morning by Rosemary Brown, MLA for Vancouver-Burrard, started the day's activities by various artists and craftswomen of Victoria.

A special thank you must go to Elizabeth Forbes, who gave us the information about International Women's Day being proclaimed on March 7 and for her great article Full Marks for Arts Centre Open House in the Times which helped create interest in the event.

Also, congratulations to all the artists and craftswomen who shared the day with us.

The Status of Women Action Group of Victoria who presented the women's kit created much interest. It was produced by the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education to create a much-needed educational program for women about women.

Posters, pamphlets and copies from old post- and pre-First World War material, illustrated what many of our grandmothers, aunts and mothers experienced to gain the advantages that many women take for granted today. — Rosalie Bowie, President, Emily Carr Arts Centre Society.

The Metric Changeover: Do We Really Need It?

By GERALD HODGE

(Hodge is director of the School of Urban and Regional Planning at Queen's University. He wrote this article for The Globe and Mail).

In the 60s you were given to understand that when you passed 30 you were over the hill. In this metrication decade, the cataclysmic year has reached right down to the pre-adolescents.

One Montreal educator thinks that anyone beyond Grade 5 (10 years old) will never fully adjust to the metric system.

You're probably not much awed by this prospect. This may mean that the Canadian Metric Commission has already got you to think metric. Or it may indicate a certain resignation to the thrust of events; the Metric Commission seems to have convinced a lot of businessmen, newspapers, labor unions, etc., to say "it's inevitable".

Or it could be simple, old apathy and, in that case maybe there is still some hope that this momentous step won't be taken in such a sheeplike way by Canadians.

Have you ever wondered, as I have, why this country is involved in such a specious exercise? Who benefits from metrication? Who pays? Are the advantages as substantial as the claims for the metric system suggest?

There are three general areas in which we are being led to expect extensive payoffs by converting Canada to the metric system of measurement. These are (1) manufactured goods sold in world export markets, (2) the learning capabilities of people, and (3) simplicity and convenience in packaging, purchasing and quality-control. Let's examine each of these areas and test the validity of the claims.

(1) World export markets will be thrown wide open to our manufacturers if we become a metric country. "It has been estimated," the reports always seem to say, "that Canada loses between $100-million and $200 million in foreign trade a year" because it has not yet converted. The Metric Commission confidently reports that exports should increase up to 10 per cent.

This is mere pie-in-the-sky. Consider two aspects of this matter.

First, world markets are not just sitting there waiting for us to exploit them by making sure our screws fit and our sizes are the same. A lot of pretty efficient firms in other countries know these sources of wealth, too.

Second, world trade is a two-way business. Once the Canadian scene is metricated, it will be an easy matter for foreign firms producing for the metric world to expand production and export to us. That old imperial system of feet, inches, gallons and quarts, if seems, acts somewhat as a "tariff barrier" in favor of our firms.

Look around you at all the products made in metricated countries such as Japan, Italy, Sweden and Czechoslovakia. They may be made to metric scale such as your toaster, your Toyota, or your transistor and you never really gave it a thought, or had to. When was the last time you had a problem getting a French bicycle, an Italian auto, or a Japanese hairdryer fixed because it was a metricated unit?

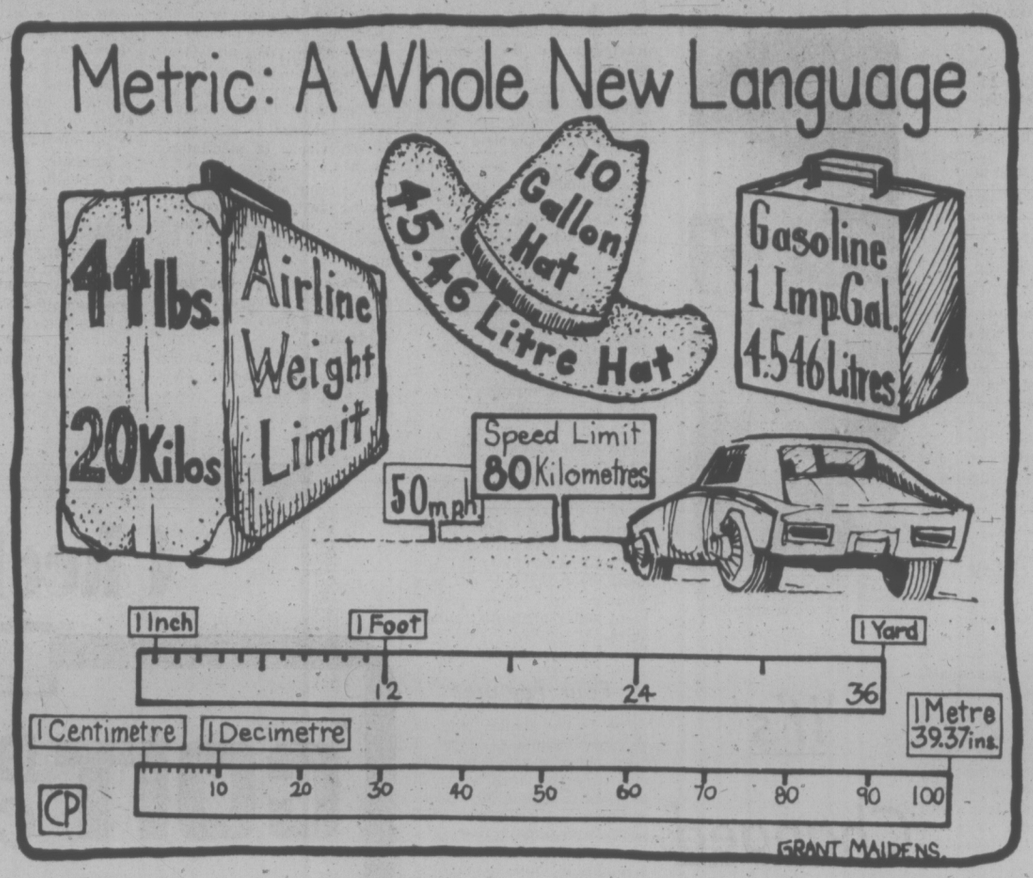
You may have had troubles for lots of other reasons, but not likely for the measurement scale it was designed in. And much the same applies to the Spaniard driving a British car or the Swede using a U.S. computer.

It is one of the wonders of our modern industrial world that this vast interchange of goods goes on somewhat oblivious to the differences in measurement scales.

And, even if it once made a difference, the global corporations now have made these problems decidedly secondary to themselves and almost inconsequential to us. Manufacturing firms can, and do, adapt to these differences easily; so why change a whole country?

(2) People will learn more easily using metric scales rather than our crude and disparate feet, pounds and gallons. Two observations can also be made here.

First, there is neither any evidence that Dutch, Swiss or Russian educators have easier going in their arithmetic classrooms, nor that children of their countries show any special prowess as a result of having metrics from day one.



Second, if metrics are so easy, then why do so many of our children experience difficulty learning about dollars and cents?

"How many feet in a mile?" the metric official asked.

"Ah, 5,280?" the man replied.

"OK, but how many feet in seven miles?" the official prodded (with a glint in his eye, no doubt).

When was the last time you wanted to know? And when was the last time a Frenchman needed to know how many metres in seven kilometres? (7,000, easy isn't it?). Oh yes, and fractions are cited as dinosaurs of our system by the metricationists. And 1-4s and 1-5s do work very well in the metric system, but 1-3 of a meter is still a repeating decimal.

As long as the properties being measured are physical attributes like weight, volume or distance, metrics are great and the problems with fractions minimal. But you still have decimals which, while neater, are not much gain for most people.

(3) Increased simplicity in packaging and purchasing has been promised by the metricationists among us. Some retailers have already begun to dispute this. Men's dress shirts have had collar sizes measured traditionally in intervals of one-half inch. Now a centimetre is almost, but not quite, this big, so the number of collar sizes offered would have to increase from eight to 11.

Would I find a 39-centimeter collar too small and a 40-centimeter collar too large in comparison to my standard 15½-inch? Add in the matter of sleeve lengths and a store might have to carry 33 different collar-sleeve combinations instead of the present 24.

And how many more dill pickles will you get out of a .68-litre bottle than out of a 24-ounce bottle? The answer is as it has always been: as many dills as the manufacturer wants to give you.

You see, these kinds of products are not going to change; the plethora of packaging sizes and types are not going to be reduced; and the advertising gimmicks are not going to cease.

Even the wine I buy from metricated countries does not come in uniform quantities. It seems to vary in "standard" bottles by as much as 70 milliliters between my favorite Portuguese and French. If those fellows can't get together on a standard metric wine bottle, why should we expect a consensus among our food-processors, for instance?

At this point, if not much sooner, I expect the metricationists to protest that we needn't perpetuate the profusion of sizes. This is the time to reconsider our standard sizes. For example, make the "pound" of butter .50 kilograms instead of the .45 kilograms it translates into directly.

You can be certain the extra 50 grams will cost you more; and will it still fit in your butter dish? That's a minor annoyance.

What if we decide to go all the way with what's known as "hard conversion" and rationalize building materials sizes? A normal 4x8-foot sheet of panelling could become 1x2 metres, I suppose, and you'd have a bit of space to fill in. Of course, our lumber firms will make everything match up just as they do now.

Unquestionably, we have the capability as individuals and firms to make the changeover. But, why? There are, seemingly, few gains to be had and there will be a lot of costs to bear. The program laid on by the Canadian Metrication Commission is going to cost millions. Retailers and wholesalers will have the burden of maintaining inventories of parts for many devices in both metric and avoirdupois units for a long time. There will be significant costs in labelling, packaging and training programs.

The Ontario ministry of education is already budgeting for special grants to school boards to cover the extra expenditures for changing textbooks and other learning materials. Many items of equipment in schools and elsewhere will become obsolete with the changeover, like your thermometer. This is pure and simple waste.

And it may be pure and simple rhetoric to ask just what contribution metrication will make to problems of poverty, famine, economic disparity, environmental pollution and urban deterioration? The answer is nothing and while we are occupied with this latest novelty of industrial society we shall lose some momentum in trying to solve them.

It's as if we're trying to contrive a way of experiencing "future shock" to prove Alvin Toffler correct.

The historian, Roderick Seidenberg, would probably contend that metrication is part of industrial man's seeming design to organize, integrate and co-ordinate social aspects of life commensurate with the machines he has perfected.

That's the "heavy" side to it. But the Canadian Meteorological Service won't be fooling when you hear this sort of weather report on April 1 of this year: "... there will be a high today of 15, winds will be from the southwest at 32, and the barometer is steady at 75.2 . . ."

Since this is a Why Not! year, I expect there will be people who put the metrication issue in those terms. There are, however, fundamental inequalities at issue in regard to women in our society. No such lofty ideals exist for metrication. It's mundane; it's costly.

Why bother?

IN CANADA, POOR STILL GET POORER

By ANTHONY WESTELL

OTTAWA — Through 20 years of extraordinary economic growth and rising affluence for the average Canadian, we have failed to make a serious effort to abolish poverty in our society.

Now that we are into a period of slow growth or even recession, it's going to be much harder to achieve social justice.

While the total wealth was growing rapidly, it would have been relatively easy to redistribute enough to the low income groups to raise them above the poverty line. There would still have been wealth left to allow some improvement in the standards of the middle and upper income groups.

But we didn't do that. The middle and upper income groups kept most of the money for themselves and relatively little went to the poor.

Average family income, after discounting for inflation, rose by 32 per cent in 1951-61 and by an incredible 46 per cent in 1961-71.

But the proportion of families below the poverty line dropped only from 18.4 per cent in 1967 to 15.9 per cent in 1971.

Relative poverty — the gap between rich and poor — actually worsened. The share of total income going to the poorest 20 per cent of the population dropped from 4.4 per cent in 1951 to 3.6 per cent in 1971. The share going to the richest 20 per cent rose from 42.8 per cent to 43.3 per cent.

Reading the figures from another angle, the National Council of Welfare reported last week 24.5 per cent of all children under 16 were living below the poverty level in 1970.

There are many explanations for this shocking "record." We thought for a time the welfare state would solve the poverty problem. We were worried about diverting too much money from saving to consumer spending. We spent a lot of time trying to reform the tax system to make it truly progressive. We talked a lot about the dangers of government spending, of poor administration which wasted welfare money, of the dangers of corrupting the poor by doing too much to help them.

But the real reason is that we have been too greedy, and the excuses we have offered have often been hypocritical.

When we have had the money to spare, we have simply been unwilling to spend it on others whose need was greater.

As the National Council reminds us, the federal budget last November cut personal income tax by $1.75 billion in a full year and reduced sales taxes by about $885 million.

That means more income and lower prices for most of us. But it means nothing for the poor who don't earn enough to pay taxes or to buy many of those cheaper goods.

What is really lacking, as usual, is not the means but the will.

A Modest Little Pain

The entire right half of me was cold. Right toes, right leg, right torso, right arm, right hand, right fingers, right ear, right scalp — all frigid.

"I will pretend nothing unusual has happened and it will go away," I said, but it didn't. Three days later, my entire right half was covered with goose pimples, which I tried to conceal by presenting only my left profile to family and public. I began walking sideways, left half forward. It was very awkward at cocktail parties, where people kept trying to maneuver around to my goose-pimple side. It was also very cold.

My left side remained as warm as ever, but the cold on the right side intensified. When I clutched a drink in my right hand the ice cubes got bigger instead of melting.

I saw a doctor. He was delighted.

"You must be a very rich man," he said.

"Far from it," I told him.

"Then you are in way over your head," he said, his delight fading in a frown. "With the cost of medical care today, serious illness is one of the most expensive luxuries in America. If you can't afford a serious illness you shouldn't take one on."

Was my illness very serious, then?

"I'll give it to you straight," the doctor said. "You have taken on a severe case of dexter fridge. In layman's language, that means you have a very cold right half."

"Is there any hope?"

"Surgery," said the doctor. "With a radical semi-ectomy, you can be back on your foot in no time."

"You mean back on my feet."

"On your foot," said the doctor. "In a semi-ectomy, we remove the patient's entire right half."

I asked how much a semi-ectomy cost. "If you have to ask," the doctor said, "you can't afford one."

I told the doctor how much money was in the bank. He became irritable. "You've got some nerve," he said, "coming in here with a case of dexter fridge when you can't even afford a mild heart attack."

I apologized. "You wouldn't go to Cartier's with a pocketful of subway tokens and expect them to sell you a diamond necklace," said the doctor, "but you walk in here without enough money to afford an infected pimple and you expect to walk out with a semi-ectomy."

It angered me. I said, "Hah!" I didn't need his super-luxury semi-ectomy. I would go to England where they had socialized medicine and get one free.

"Don't be foolish," he cautioned. "Stay in America where you can get the best medical care in the world."

What good was the best if only the richest could afford it, I asked.

The doctor's tone changed. "My boy," he said, "be reasonable. Don't take on illnesses like dexter fridge, coronary thrombosis and kidney failure if you can't swing them at the bank. Be modest. Put enough money aside to pay for something in your income range and when you come into the hospital with it, you'll come with the assurance that you're going to enjoy the best medical care in the world."

In the end he was kind. He went over current hospital and medical costs with me, analyzed my financial situation and suggested that in five years, if I was frugal and took no vacations, I would be able to afford cataracts, a peptic ulcer or a comminuted fracture of the shin bone.

The family, as you may imagine, was not pleased when I told them what we were saving for. Why should I be entitled to wallow in the excellence of American medical care when nobody else had even had a trip to Venice, they asked. Families can be terribly selfish when the luxuries are being parcelled out.

As I write this, I am wearing half an Eskimo suit lined with half an electric blanket. It covers my entire right half. This is very comforatble in the privacy of the writing cell, but when I wear it in the streets, as I must, people stare disconcertingly, particularly in the summer when my left half is clothed in light linens.

I hope soon to be free of it. An extremely rich woman who has had, done and seen absolutely everything wrote recently that she heard I have a very expensive case of dexter fridge. She wants to buy it so she will have something to talk about in Nassau after her semi-ectomy.

If her price is right, I may be able to afford both a family trip to Venice and a new strain of viral pneumonia.

Meditation: Way to Tune Down

How To Do It

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

If you find yourself a quiet corner and put your mind and muscles in neutral there for 20 minutes twice a day — can it make you more energetic, perceptive, creative, productive, more content with life?

Quite a number of business and professional people in Victoria, not the sort of people interested in mysticism, say: yes, it can. Scientific research suggests they're right.

Meditation by various ways and means is an ancient practice in a multitude of religions, particularly eastern faiths but including the Christian and Jewish. But for close to 20 years it has been experiencing a sort of renaissance in the western world, mostly on college campuses and sometimes tinted by mysticism.

Practical Way

Now, unrelated to religion, the practice of meditation is winning a quiet but impressive acceptance in the so-called middle class as a practical way of tuning down in a hectic society.

Transcendental meditation (TM) appears to be the most popular technique, perhaps in part because its advocates are well-organized, dedicated and articulate and because they offer a tidy, if pricy, program.

What can meditation do for you? Here's what some local people who practice TM said it has done for them:

Harry Nicolson, land surveyor: "It's given me a sense of direction in life. I seem to understand better where I'm going. I'm able to handle any situation feeling I know I can cope with it."

Roger Smeeth, architect: "So many things. Firstly, with regard to my architectural work, it's been able to sort out all the many different problems that impinge upon an architectural problem to enable me to see more clearly what the actual problem is and therefore solve it more readily.

More Energy

"I've been able to do as much or more than I was doing before in much less time, requiring much less energy."

Dr. Joe Haegert, physician: "Essentially I feel much more relaxed, less tense . . . I've felt much more energetic, partly due to the fact I'm sleeping really well."

Paul Horn, musician: "It's changed my whole life completely. It's put things in a more balanced perspective. It's given me a lot of energy . . . it's made it easier for me to cope with problems and situations as they come up in life so I don't find it so much of a strain to make decisions and solve problems."

Gordon Fawcett, insurance agent: "It's given me a greatly increased capacity to cope with my work and very comfortable sort of contentment. Summing it up very briefly, it's brought a sort of benevolent outlook on things in an increasingly hectic environment."

Feel Better

Dr. Eugene Kaellis, dentist: "I think I'm less fanatic than I used to be . . . I feel better generally and I would say these things started to happen when I started meditating."

Transcendental meditation is called the practical aspect of a movement founded by and still led by an Indian sage, Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. It is active in 60 countries through "World Plan Centres" and advocates estimate there are about 750,000 people around the world practising TM.

TM advocates are convinced that, apart from the personal benefits derived from meditation, TM practised on a world-wide scale will produce a climate for universal peace. But they are equally convinced the technique must be taught their way and have set out to do that through their network of World Plan Centres.

TM has been taught in Victoria for nine years, the last six from the World Plan Centre at 1270 Pandora where it's estimated there are about 3,000 to 4,000 people in Greater Victoria now practising TM. The local centre is averaging about 30 graduates a month.

Learning TM is going to cost you: $50 for high school students, $60 for university students, $55 for old age pensioners, $115 for other adults or $180 for a family. Terms: cash, in advance.

On the face of it, that seems costly for a movement aiming at personal and world harmony. But TM spokesman are quick to tell you that every nickel is ploughed back into the movement to spread its teaching. And the international organization's books are audited by an established British firm.

One development giving meditation a boost into middle-class acceptance is the scientific research measuring what happens to your body. That subject continues to fascinate researchers, and there are reported to be about 100 studies under way in North America alone examining various facets.

Deep Relaxation

In brief, your body slips swiftly into a state of deep and natural relaxation, deeper than any but the deepest sleep.

Oxygen consumption, one measure of a relaxed state, drops dramatically. Skin resistance, another measure not fully understood but associated with states of stress, increases, indicating profound relaxation. Levels of blood lactate, also associated with stress, decrease as well.

Over a longer term, people suffering from hypertention have shown a drop in blood pressure while they were practising TM or a similar technique and not just while they were meditating. But all authorities underline this does not mean meditation cures blood pressure problems.

These results are among widely publicized research undertaken in recent years by Dr. Herbert Benson, a cardiologist who is associate professor of medicine at Harvard and director of the hypetention section of Beth Israel Hospital in Boston. They have been reported in prestigious scientific journals.

His interest in the bodily effects of meditation began when he was studying the relationship between cardiovascular function and the emotions.

In a recent interview with writer Maggie Scarf, published in the New York Times magazine, Benson noted that the instruction given TM students were basically not very different from those used in many other meditative procedures.

FIELD
. . . pure consciousness

'It's Changed My Whole Life' —Horn

Four Features

The four essential features of most techniques were: a quiet place in which to meditate, a passive attitude, which involved not trying to "force" anything to happen; a comfortable position so one's muscular activity was reduced to a minimum and a mental device, that is, a word or sound to be repeated over and over by the meditator to bring mental activity to a halt.

With TM, the word is called a mantra and each student is asked to keep the mantra he or she has been given secret.

Some time ago Benson speculated that the same results TM achieved could be produced with subjects following a simple set of instructions he drew up. He says studies he subsequently conducted bear this out.

TM spokesmen disagree.

Fraser Field is president of the local chapter of the Students' International Meditation Society, one branch of the Victoria World Plan Centre which directs the program aimed at the university campus. Field, 25, is psychologist and part-time researcher at the University of Victoria.

How It Works

How does TM work?

"We can think of thoughts as having some basis, some source," he says. "And what we experience when we meditate is the thinking process at progressively finer and finer levels until we experience the inception of thought, then transcend to the very finest aspect of the thinking process and experience the source of thinking, that is, just pure consciousness, pure creative intelligence."

Field says we can deduce logically there is an underlying field of infinite intelligence and energy. Thoughts have intelligence because they take some direction. They have energy because there's motion involved, one thought follows another.

"It we can consciously contact that field, then we'll find that consciously we'll be making use of that field in life."

The explanation is verified by experience of meditators, he says.

"We come out of meditation feeling clearer, more energetic . . . quite spontaneously we're more fulfilled in our activity.

"It's a very practical technique. It's for the person who wants to be more efficient, be successful."

Meditation "is so natural and so easy I used to meditate on the subway in Toronto."

Another aspect of meditation which intrigues researchers is its effect on drug users. A Le Dain Commission report details one study which shows a dramatic drop in drug use after respondents began meditating.

Advocates claim age, and even health, are not barriers. Field says psychotics are being trained to meditate in some U.S. mental hospitals.

"We can start children meditating at about four years old," and he has instructed one man aged 87.

In fact one Swedish study is examining whether meditation slows down the aging process. That holds possibilities which could make just about everybody a convert.

PETER MURRAY - EDITOR

The Only Way To See Canada

By PAT BARCLAY

Does anyone today still read Richard Halliburton? Time was when nearly everyone I knew was a Halliburton fan, including the school librarian. Her collection (all the books in our little library were "hers"; she knew each one intimately and could detect an alteration in its physical condition at 40 paces with her back turned) of Halliburton books occupied one of the best-situated shelves in the room. It was just at eye level, beside a stiff old window which caught the afternoon sun. Halliburton had to share joint tenancy with two or three ambitious geranium plants, an arrangement which suited them very well as he was hardly ever at home. There was usually a waiting list for titles like The Royal Road to Romance or The Complete Book of Marvels — titles which dared to promise the world, attached to texts which seemed to us actually to deliver, as they say, a reasonable facsimile.

After Halliburton, other travel books invariably palled, until at last I gave up reading them altogether. The Silent Traveller, to me, was somebody who did charming illustrations. Then one day I came upon No Passport, which was, of all things, a travel book about Canada. Written by an independent Canadian, of all people. I had thought travel books about Canada were the perogative of (a) modern tourist bureaus, or (b) antiquated foreign adventurers.

That Eugene Cloutier appreciated the anomaly of his position we can infer from the title of the book as it was originally wirtten in French: Le Canada sans passeport. It was his happy idea to discover this country by himself, by whatever method (bushplane, scooter, rent-a-car, etc.) would facilitate that discovery most. His journey across the land took him five and a half months, and when en route he met a German journalist on a four-day jaunt in Canada (this was 1966; the German had an assignment to "wrap up the separatist crisis" for a Hamburg newspaper) the journalist asked him, half seriously, "Did you cross it on foot?"

No Passport has now been reissued in paperback, and if you plan to travel anywhere this summer, you may be interested in picking up a copy just to see how good travelling is done.

For No Passport is not merely an account of what Cloutier saw; it also tells us how he saw it. His frankness in handing out both bouquets and brickbats is one of the delights of the book. But this outspokenness is combined with an extraordinary capacity for empathy with others. When Cloutier explains what lies behind the silence of a Nova Scotia fisherman, or the brief smile of a Saskatchewan villager, we are obliged to believe him. How could anyone who writes with this much generosity and tolerance be mistaken?

Then too, Cloutier's sense of humor never deserts him (except once, in Gaspe.) He is curious without nosiness, intelligent without vanity. He has stamina; he is organized, yet ever-ready to rearrange plans to take advantage of the serendipitous; he can hold his liquor. In short, he is an ideal travelling companion.

No Passport was written at a time of internal strife in Canada, and Cloutier's consciousness of tension, of the "need to carry the entire weight of the province of Quebec on my shoulders" (particularly in the West and in the Maritimes) seldom leaves him. Yet he remains optimistic, encouraged by the cultural liberation of his own province and signs which he preceives in others. (He describes a meeting with an Ontarian who considered himself an American, and Canada a "dim extension of the United States"; Cloutier tried attacking first Canada, then Ontario, then the man's home region. The man "flew into a passion of rage". Then they both laughed.) He is also impressed with his discovery of what he terms the "geographical reality" of French Canada outside Quebec. He values the contribution of Canadian Indians, saying, "If Canada is finally to give itself a face and definition it needs them." Near the end of the book he makes a statement to which the thoroughness of his travels has entitled him, and which echoes in the mind long after the book is read: "We are all united, unknown to ourselves . . ."

I wish I had space enough to quote further from No Passport — not the least of its charm is Cloutier's prose style (even in translation) and understated wit. Look on pages 18-19, for example, or 65, or 146-8. Read what he has to say about dry (yes, dry!) Canadian wines. Find out why Whitehorse is like Tahiti. And if you're planning to spend your summer at home raising vegetables for the freeezer, it's a great way to do all that and get to know the country, too.

It's true that No Passport shows its age here and there. If you enjoy collecting statistics you'll find that the few the book does have to offer are decidedly out of date. And when Cloutier rhapsodizes over the production of Saskatchewan potash ("the world's hunger will have lost the game, theoretically at least, for two thousand years") he sounds painfully naive today. In the end, though, none of this matters. No Passport is that delightful and seldom-come-by paradox: an entertainment and an education combined.

NO PASSPORT, by Eugene Cloutier. Paperjacks $1.95.

The Essence of a Country

Not many publishers would have the courage to issue a $25 book of photographs without one word of text. But then not many photographers have the magic name of Henri Cartier-Bresson, one of the camera giants of the century.

Now 67, Cartier-Bresson was the first photographer to be exhibited in a one-man show at the Louvre (in 1954). He is a founder of the elite international agency, Magnum, which has provided many epic photographs of the past three decades.

ABOUT RUSSIA. Photographs by Henri Cartier-Bresson. Oxford. $25.50.

The new International Center of Photography at its recent opening in New York featured a showing of pictures Cartier-Bresson took in Russia in 1954 and in 1972-73. This handsome book is a selection of the best photographs from that second trip.

The captions contain only the barest information where the pictures were taken reflecting Cartier-Bresson's aversion to editorial comment.

"I want people to look at the photographs and find what's there for themselves," he says. "I simply sniff around and take the temperature of a place."

In his six-paragraph introduction Cartier-Bresson adds: "The camera is not what I would call an ideal tool for answering the 'why' of things. It is better suited to suggesting, to recalling . . . the photographs should serve to stimulate the viewers' own reflections."

Clearly, what interests the great French photographer most is people. Each one of the 141 photographs in the book contains at least one human figure. Sterile monuments and landscapes are left to others to portray.

What Cartier-Bresson seeks is the evocation of place or situation at a single moment in time. In doing so he gives us much more than the faces of Russia and goes to the very essence of the country. — P.M.

The Easy-Going Poet

By LEONARD RUSSO

Alden Nowlan may be the closest thing Canada has to an easy-going poet. Unlike many of his clamorous contemporaries, Nowlan is casual, relaxed and confident (perhaps even a little smug).

In Canada (and the U.S. too), much of modern poetry has a peculiar edge, urgency and punch. Just think of Irving Layton (who loves to flex his sexual muscles) or Al Purdy (whose constant energy is almost incredible).

I'M A STRANGER HERE MYSELF. By Alden Nowlan. Clarke, Irwin. $6.95.

Nowlan is a poet of another order. He has no startling message (other than life is absurd, which he assumes we already know). When he moralizes, it is never with any big stick. In his poems, he is just an ordinary man with no grand opinions, who will occasionally look up the skirt of a young woman.

Nowlan, now in his 40s, was born and raised in Windsor, N.S., before settling in New Brunswick. He worked several years as news editor for the Saint John Telegraph Journal. Today he is known to many New Brunswickers as the man who sometimes takes unpopular stands in a weekly column. His main job is that of writer-in-residence at a university.

For anyone unfamiliar with his work, he is probably the most readable poet in Canada. There is nothing razzle-dazzle or elliptical about his poems. If anything, they are occasionally too comfortable and smooth. His subjects include his best friends, passing strangers, what happens at a party or in a dentist's waiting room.

One of the more touching poems in this latest collection is entitled "The Old Gentleman." The setting is a meeting of some sort, and the chairman has asked people to give their names before addressing questions. "The old gentleman" turns out to be Louis St. Laurent, but nobody believes him. Nowlan describes the former prime minister as a "courteous" man, who never lights a cigarette without "offering the pack to the person in front and the person behind and the persons seated on either side of him."

NOWLAN . . . no big messages

It is this kind of subtle underlying irony that is one of Nowlan's major strengths. Others include his marvellous feeling for nostalgia, and his willingness to reveal his little weaknesses and quirks of character. But Nowlan seldom becomes terribly passionate or upset, at least not in this collection. Either he is a genuinely sanguine man, or else he has a standing order with Seagram's.

I'm A Stranger Here Myself is a thoroughly readable book of poems by one of Canada's better-known poets. It may not rock your soul, but it is almost certain to provide something rewarding.

THE WAR FROM THE OTHER SIDE

By PETE LOUDON

This is a salty dish for those who hunger for yarns of that great sea war fought in the North Atlantic between 1939 and 1945. And perhaps because it appears 30 years after the last of Hitler's U-boats were captured, scuttled, rammed, depth-charged, shelled or bombed into steel coffins on the ocean floor, the story says something that many previous sea war writers omitted.

The author has conveyed the feeling that the men of the U-boats were men in almost every sense the same as the men of the corvettes, frigates and destroyers who fought on our side. They were men not really concerned with the politics of the war. They were dedicated to winning mainly because that was their best means of personal survival. There is no clicking of heels, no super-race ranting.

U-BOAT, by Lothar-Gunther Buchheim. Collins. $8.95.

There are no expressions of hatred for the enemy, just a practical acceptance of the nasty necessities of war. Buchheim's German sailors don't dream of conquering the world. During the long hours on watch they dream sex fantasies, they dream of home, they dream of leave, they dream of peacetime. Basically, they just want to go on living but when the reader contemplates the horrors of the single cruise recounted in this book, he might wonder where they found the courage to keep trying.

The war is going against them. The German air force has no time to help them and even when they are ashore they are under attack. Shore-time is time for drinking and dissipation. Sea-time is 50 men in a small steel cylinder, the space so cramped the men coming off duty take over the beds of those going on duty, where the fumes of battery acid and diesel oil pollute the breath, where the food is green with mould, where only on rare occasions can a man seek the comfort and a smoke on deck.

U-boats spent most of their Atlantic time on top looking for game, but except for the deck officers and lookouts the crew had few sniffs of invigorating salt air. The winter gales bounced and bruised surfaced submariners as violently as they hammered convoy escort vessels. But escort vessels might be 10 days to three weeks at sea. A U-boat patrolled while her food and torpedoes lasted. If hunting was poor, as in the case of U-A, she might be out 70 or 80 days.

If there was action, the U-boat could be forced to stay for days submerged, her crew sucking on cannisters of oxygen, held helpless while the sea squeezed her hull and depth charges sought to breach her plates. And all a man could do was sit and wait, curse or pray, cry or scream. And sooner or later, he'd probably die like a rat stuck in a sewer pipe.

The author notes that of the 41,000 German submariners who served in the Second World War, 26,200 never returned. When you read this book you give them A for guts. And you give mankind top marks for stupidity for periodically putting its young men into wars like this.

That's what's different about this book. No glory.

Cautious Paths Taken by Youth

Invariably, young poets today are disadvantaged by their own education. Many hold bachelor's degrees or better, and know from A to Z about poetry. The trouble is — knowing about it and writing it are not the same.

All of which is an apt introduction to these two books by young local poets. Both are in their 20s, have completed university, and seem conversant with literary ideas. In fact, both their books come with introductory explanations.

POEMS. By Patrick White. Soft Press. $2.25.

SOMETIMES, SUDDENLY. By Sally Bryer. J. J. Douglas Ltd. $3.95.

"At this juncture," writes Patrick White, "I can only very inadequately judge the direction my work is taking." Fair enough. Some of his poems may be too rigidly structured for most readers' tastes, but occasionally he will startle you with: "A jet drags its vaporous scar across the sky." Then again, no one will be unimpressed with the way he describes his dead grandfather "lying so complacently in the coffin."

The latter words are from a poem that is easily the standout in this collection, and more about the woman left behind than the poet's grandfather. Here, White handles his material well, although individual lines often have an archaic ring to them. The balance of this collection is not as successful.

What immediately strikes me about Sally Bryer's book, I regret to say, is its price. To pay $4 for just 25 pages of poetry, and a poorly conceived introduction, is outrageous, even in an inflationary era.

Bryer's poems themselves pose a difficult paradox. They are written in wonderfully concrete words, but tend to be vague and "poetic."

The title poem is one of the better in the collection. Here, Bryer's technique, though poetic, has a ring of truth. The rest of her book seldom fares as well.

On the whole, the problem with both poets is one of style. White, looking for a greater oomph, has taken up "the challenge of more rigorous forms." Bryer, manoeuvring away from intellectualism, believes poetry should be "textured."

In short, both poets are searching outside themselves for what can only come from within. They are steering cautious paths among remote poetical concepts (a habit no doubt born of their education), but they simply aren't hooking up, sounding off, and getting those great wheels of the soul turning. — L.R.

The 'Sex Engineers' Go Back to the Old-Fashioned Values

By JEAN WHITE

Masters and Johnson wrote an almost unreadable physiological textbook that became a runaway bestseller (which shows what the word sex in a title can do for a book).

Now they have written their first book intended for the general public, and they hope it will be readable — and equally saleable.

It turns out to be a rediscovery of a lot of old-fashioned words not heard too much recently — words like conciliation, trust, caring, feeling, faithfulness.

After publication of their first book, Human Sexual Response, a medical textbook for professionals, in 1966, Dr. William H. Masters and Virginia E. Johnson found themselves denounced by some as "sexual engineers" with a mechanistic view of sex.

"We've been faintly chagrined since then, to be called sexual engineers — you know, that cold scientist in the white coat bit. Of course, we do wear white coats in the lab," and Johnson smiled with a warmth that stripped the white coat off the scientist.

Masters and Johnson, working partners for nearly 18 years before they became marriage partners four years ago, have come out of the lab to talk about their new book.

"Our first book written for professionals was popular only in terms that it sold," Masters observed. "Any layman who tried to read it knows it was incomprehensible. Someone called it the 'most-purchased, least-read best seller.'"

THE PLEASURE BOND, by Dr. William H. Masters and Virginia E. Johnson. Little, Brown. $8.95.

If not a reader for the general public, Human Sexual Response and the second medical textbook, Human Sexual Inadequacy, are recognized as solid, sound scientific reports on innovative research on sexual function and dysfunction now widely influential in clinical treatment and behavior studies.

Now, in The Pleasure Bond, Masters and Johnson, as scientists in mufti, are writing of warmth, feelings, emotions. As they put it in one section in the book:

"Nothing good is going to happen in bed between a husband and wife unless good things have been happening between them before they got into bed. There is no way for good sexual technique to remedy a poor emotional relationship."

"Is this a new thing for us?" asks Johnson. "No. But we deliberately tried to keep anything warm or humanistic out of the medical textbooks . . . Now we would like to put the scientific research to use helping people. When something's wrong, couples don't want to know the heart rate."

So Masters and Johnson have written what they view as a "how-not-to-do" manual. Despite being dubbed "sex engineers," they never did have much enthusiasm for "how-to-do-it" manuals or emphasis on technique.

Masters regards the book as a first step toward preventive medicine, helping those who have minor degrees of distress in their relationships. "In the nine years since we wrote our first book the pendulum has swung a long way. And now we think it is swinging back a little."

The "new look" in the title was "rather tongue-in-cheek," Johnson admits as a forewarning to those who are thinking in terms of new positions and new ways of sex swinging.

"Probably much will sound old-fashioned," she added. "But there also is a new look for some" — and here the tongue left the cheek — "for some who in their lifetime probably never heard such words as commitment and honesty and shared vulnerability."

Much has happened in the last decade, and Masters and Johnson deal with swinging sex in groups, women's liberation and its effect on sexual relationships, extra-marital sex (no longer infidelity or adultery), and other manifestations of the "sexual revolution."

Among other things, they are saying that despite popular absorption in a "sexual revolution," there has been none: what really has happened is that lagging sex attitudes and practices are finally catching up to deeper changes in our society, such as family structure and lifestyles. And they are also saying that any lasting relationship — with marriage or not ("we don't tell people how to live their lives") — requires commitment and mutual concern that unite two people by a bond of pleasure.

"I always recall Peggy Lee singing that song, Is That All There Is? when people toss around romantic notions about sensuality and the body," said Johnson.

"Young people expect sparkling and amazing things to happen. But sex isolated from emotion and feeling becomes starved and limited. That doesn't mean you can't have a lovely sensual experience, but for a lasting relationship, you must have the color, the quality, the feeling between two people together."

The book draws on several symposia that the two scientists held with different groups — recently marrieds; husbands and wives carrying on extra-marital affairs; sex swingers; second marrieds — in different cities. They found it "extraordinarily difficult" to pull together a panel of "swingers" sufficiently comfortable to talk about their experiences with group sex and other experiments. And they found most had unsatisfactory experiences as couples.

"It was a little startling, the almost innocence, the naivete of some, hoping to find happiness in swinging," Johnson said.

"Get a plant," Johnson comments tartly.

The two scientists, who studied couples in the act of sex through movies, electronic monitors and test-tube analyses to gather the facts (and a certain amount of notoriety) for their monumental clinical studies, are still carrying on basic research and clinical treatment at the Reproductive Biology Foundation in St. Louis.

If they see no sexual "revolution" taking place, Masters and Johnson do see tremendous potential for "sexual progress" in the women's liberation movement — with both men and women as the benefactors.

"It will free the man from the burden, and often guilt, of sex performance," says Masters. "The greatest thing that can happen to a male is to have a responsive woman. Her turns-on inevitably lead to more pleasurable turns-on for him."

Masters sums up the sexual progress over the last few decades in three prepositions — to, for or with. It is best to let Masters and Johnson parse their meaning with these prepositions:

"In the youth of my generation," Masters explained, "on his wedding night, a groom did something 'to' his bride and she had a duty to him. Then about 15 years ago, she did something 'for' him. The male in his great wisdom modestly accepted his role, and she was allowed to take pleasure . . ."

Johnson: "It was a step but unfortunately in the wrong direction. It was bad for a woman lying there in bed. She was entitled to feel pleasure but still not entitled to respond or be part of the experience."

"It wasn't good for the man either," chimed in her husband. "He was responsible not only for himself but giving her pleasure."

Now both Masters and Johnson warn of a danger arising from sexual equality for women. "It will be the double standard in reverse if women say: 'You had your turn. Now it's my turn. I'm entitled to this or that'," Masters emphasizes.

Unfortunately, the Masters and Johnson prose in the new book is not as exciting as they feel sex can be or as they themselves can be when they talk about it with warmth and humor. But there is no doubting their commitment to the belief that a bond of pleasure unites those who share mutual concern, responsibility and vulnerability — "willingness to be open and to protect the openness of your partner to you."

Washington Post

INDIAN CRIME-DRINK ISSUE IGNORED: MP

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadians are reacting to the high rate of alcohol-related crime on Indian reserves the same way they react to gangland-style killings in Montreal, says a Progressive Conservative MP.

Stanley Korchinski told the Commons Indian affairs committee that most people slough off reports of crime on Indian reserves by saying "they're at it again . . . leave them alone."

If the murder rate among the 28,000 Indians of northern Saskatchewan was applied to Montreal, it would be the equivalent of about 300 killings, he said.

And much of this crime among Indians was related to alcohol. Korchinski said he knew of cases where a plane-load of alcohol was shipped into isolated Indian communities or where a steady stream of taxis were used to shuttle in alcohol for consumption by Indians on reserves.

Arthur Kroeger, the deputy Indian affairs minster, said the problem of alcohol use was pervasive among Indians and was a matter of great concern to the department.

But white society was not all that successful in dealing with the problem of alcoholism either, he said.

Some Indian chiefs had expressed concern over the problem and were opposed to allowing the sale of alcohol on reserves, he added.

"But prohibition is as difficult to enforce on reserves as in the larges society."

Korchinski said the alcohol problem is not limited to Indians but added there is a need for some sort of an inquiry to look for solutions.

The Indian affairs department and the health department had just begun a $3-million program to study alcoholism among Indians, Kroeger said.

The committee was studyng the main estimates of the department for 1975-76.

Bribe Inquiry Started by PM

OTTAWA (CP)— An investigation into allegations of bribery and bid-rigging in the Irving Whale salvage case did not start until four months after transport ministry officials first learned of the matter, an RCMP report says.

The report, prepared following a year-long investigation by the RCMP, says the case was handed over to them after Prime Minister Trudeau's office intervened, advising deputy transport minsiter O. G. Stoner of the allegations.

Donald Kerr, vice-president of Atlantic Salvage, said in a telephone interview from Halifax that he was offered a $50,000 bribe in the fall of 1971 to bid high on a federal government contract to salvage an oil-laden barge that sank off Prince Edward Island.

Based on information gathered in the police investigation, the Nova Scotia government advised that the case should be dropped. Provincial authorities said there was not enough evidence to support prosecution, although "there were some questionable tactics involved."

However, Transport Minister Jean Marchand said that as a result of the investigation, a government consultant was fired because "we felt he was too close to the circle of companies."

The RCMP report said Kerr raised the matter of the bribe and the bid-rigging attempt during a meeting with two officials of the transport ministry and an outside government consultant during a meeting Nov. 15, 1971.

But following that meeting the transport officials and the consultant "mutually agreed" that since Kerr had not put the allegation in writing they would go ahead and recommend awarding a contract, the report said.

In early January, a recommendation on a contract was sent to treasury board by deputy minister O. G. Stoner, whom the report says had not heard of the bribery attempt up to that time.

A month later, Michael Pitfield, then deputy secretary to the cabinet, advised Stoner of a letter outlining details of the bribery attempt.

The report says the information came to the attention of the prime minister through a close personal friend, Dr. Joe MacGinnis of Toronto, who at the time was living in Los Angeles. MacGinnis had been asked by a friend of Kerr's to bring the matter to the government's attention.

However, a spokesman for Trudeau's office said he was not involved or informed of the case at that time. He said MacGinnis also was a friend of Pitfield and had given the information to him.

The prime minister told the Commons he first learned of the case after he returned last week from a European vacation and reviewed the matter with Marchand.

The report says that after Pitfield passed on his information to the transport department, Kerr agreed to put his allegations in writing. A detailed letter was sent to the department Feb. 29, 1972.

Two weeks later the matter was referred to the RCMP for investigation.

Kerr said he did not feel there had been any impropriety by senior officials of either the federal or Nova Scotia governments in the Irving Whale case.

In the early stages, he said, he had some difficulty convincing civil servants that the matter should be investigated.

"However, from the moment the report reached the desk of the minister concerned and his deputies, it was handled firmly, decisively and with commendable speed," Kerr said.

No contract was ever awarded for the salvage job. Transport Minister Jean Marchand told the Commons in February, 1973, the tenders were higher than expected and government feared an oil spill if the barge was raised. She carried one million gallons of bunker oil when she sank.

The minister identified the companies who bid on the contract as:

—Atlantic Salvage and Dredging Ltd. of Halifax and Smit Tak International Ltd. of the Netherlands, $1.8 million;

—Marine Industries Ltd., MIL Tug and Salvage Ltd. and Foundation Canada Ltd., $2.4 million;

—Murphy Pacific Marine Salvage Co. and International Underwater Constructors Inc. of California, $4.4 million.

Marine Industries was one of 13 companies and 14 individuals charged in court here last week with conspiracy to defraud taxpayers of more than $4 million on six dredging contracts.

Trudeau Stays Mum On Inflation Plan

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau was sympathetic but unyielding Friday when pressed in the Commons to give details on the government's quest for a consensus to beat inflation.

Opposition leader Robert Stanfield asked when a statement will be made on talks with business and labor about a possible consensus on prices, profits and wages. The government's refusal to give any information made it difficult for him to keep his temper, the usually mild-mannered Stanfield said.

"In all sincerity, I don't expect the leader of the Opposition to sit idly by and keep his temper," Trudeau replied. "He's doing his job in pressing the government."

But he repeated the government's position that it cannot make a public report on any progress towards a consensus.

"On the government side, we are in a difficult and delicate operation of trying to keep the inflation rate down by seeking a consensus."

Any statement now would be merely a repetition of earlier, general comments, Trudeau said in turning down Stanfield's request for some details before Easter.

WINNIPEG PRICES LEAD

OTTAWA (CP) — The sharpest rise in consumer price indexes among 14 major cities last month was in Winnipeg and the smallest increase in Edmonton, Statistics Canada reported Friday.

In the last 12 months the index for Winnipeg has gone up 13.7 per cent, the highest among the cities. Higher food, housing and transport costs were the main factors.

February over-all increases in Vancouver was four-tenths of one per cent.

Emergency Hanging Debate Ruled Out

OTTAWA (CP) — An attempt to force an emergency Commons debate on capital punishment was ruled out of order Friday by Speaker James Jerome.

He made his decision on procedural grounds after the request by John Reynolds (PC — Burnaby-Richmond-Delta), a death penalty advocate.

Reynolds said there has been an increase in murders and Parliament should review the five-year extension of the partial capital punishment ban it approved in 1973.

Jerome said an emergency debate, interrupting normal House business, was not allowable under Commons rules because daily procedures provided other opportunities to discuss the issue.

He agreed with Reynolds, however, that the issue is important.

A Weighty Issue Arouses Anger in Toronto Council

TORONTO (UPI) — At last the battle is over — and the giant seat of Alderman Joe Piccininni's pants should no longer be an issue.

Joe (left) will fly to Milan, Italy, next month in first-class luxury because, it's said, he's too big to fit into an economy-class seat.

Taxpayers will foot the bill.

Piccininni, weighing more than 300 pounds and by far the heaviest member on city council, will attend a five-day conference of mayors of some of the world's largest cities.

According to critics it will be his fourth trip to the conference, always in Milan. Only the third, says Joe.

Piccininni's father came from Italy.

For two days angry words flew round City Hall. Then Joe, 53, got the trip by a vote of 10 to 9.

"But I'm still furious about it," Ald. Elizabeth Eayrs snapped Friday. "The whole thing is an outrage, completely ridiculous.

"This is supposed to be an economy year. We can't find money for playground amenities but we can find money for useless trips.

"Alderman Piccininni weighs almost as much as two other council members put together . . . and that doesn't really show the city in the best possible light."

City budget chief Arthur Eggleton said: "It's either one first-class ticket or two economy tickets."

The Toronto Sun trumpeted in a headline: "Joe's girth no mirth, especially when flying."

"We can see little value to Toronto in Joe going back to visit the land of his ancestors," the Sun said. "The previous trips have not resulted in any wondrous new ideas from the Piccininni cranium.

"Maybe it's the Milanese pasta or lasagna that has special appeal. If so, the council could save if Joe were sent instead for a meal at a fancy Italian restaurant where the food is as tasty as Milan's and costs slightly under the $1,500 the city pays to send Joe to Italy."

Piccininni, obviously miffed by the uproar, said: "My weight should have nothing to do with it. If that's the only thing they're interested in, they're making a mockery of the whole situation.

"I find that conference as interesting as anything I've ever attended. It provides for a useful exchange of ideas on big-city problems."

Retorted Ald. Eayrs: "Last time he said he learned a lot about preserving historic buildings. But whenever we have a vote here on keeping something historic, he always votes to tear it down."

HAPPY HOOKER NOW HAPPY HOUSEWIFE

TORONTO (UPI) — Xaviera Hollander, the onetime Happy Hooker confirmed Friday she is secretly married to a 40-year-old Toronto antique dealer. The ceremony took place here last October.

But the 31-year-old blonde denied that the marriage is aimed at helping her beat moves to deport her from Canada.

"It's for love, not for immigration reasons," she said.

Miss Hollander said she met the antique dealer, Frank Allen, in Toronto three years ago. It is Allen's first marriage.

Young Student Saw The Light When School Day Cut Short

max low

Bored because the CUPE strike has left you with a short school day?

Well, kids, there are plenty of things you can do to relieve the boredom.

Smash up a few phone boxes; hang around a few street corners.

Why, just the other day there was a group of youngsters playing ball across Yates Street, a little below Douglas, lobbing it back and forth just over the tops of the rush-hour cars from one sidewalk to the other.

Quite harmless, I suppose. But also quite useless. And a bit of a nuisance as well.

Those are a few suggestions. And then there's young Hilary Wharf and her friend Sharon Stewart. They knew what to do with their time.

Hilary is 13 and a student at Central Junior High School — that is, she was a full-time student when the Canadian Union of Public Employees wasn't picketing the place. Right now she attends for two hours a day between 8:40 a.m. and 10:40 a.m. She admits she's bored.

"In some ways it's kind of dumb going at all," Hilary says, "because we're not learning anything, we're just repeating what we already know."

And so she looked for something that wasn't "kind of dumb."

Hilary went to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind on Blanshard Street and offered her services. Now each afternoon she hops on a bus near her Dallas Road home and travels across the city to spend her time with blind children.

One day, Hilary plays with four-year-old Timmy Black or takes him for walks in the park.

"He has such a great imagination," she says with warmth.

And the next day she visits Tricia Stephens, who has been blind and physically handicapped since her birth two and-a-half years ago.

Hilary "just talks" to Tricia but she also helps Tricia's mother, Diane Stephens, who runs a day-care centre in her Esquimalt home.

And now, after doing this for a few weeks, Hilary has a helper in 13-year-old schoolmate Sharon, who lives on Richardson Street.

Sharon, born in Toronto and living in Victoria for only the last two years, has had plenty of experience helping her mother, who runs a rest home. And, when she found out what Hilary was doing, Sharon pestered her until she agreed to take her along, too.

Hilary has already had quite a bit of experience in helping others, also. She was born in Victoria and moved back here just over a year ago after her family lived in Edmonton for a while.

"My mother used to volunteer work with cerebral palsy patients and I helped her," says Hilary. "But I was particularly interested in working with blind people and not long before I left Edmonton I contacted the CNIB, but they said I was too young." She was 11 at the time.

Hilary isn't sure yet what path her life will take.

"I might like to take up social work," she says. "My uncle Brian Wharf, who's at McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario, has been appointed to head the new social work department which opens this fall at UVic."

"But I don't know," she adds with her eyes widening. "There's so much to choose from."

You get an overwhelming feeling that Hilary Wharf is a woman, really, not a girl. She seems so intelligent, so grown up. Perhaps even a little too grown up. And yet she giggles a lot, makes little remarks to Sharon, and blushes often as you ask her things.

You can tell that Isabel Beveridge, district administrator for the CNIB, is delighted with Hilary.

"She's an amazingly mature, sensitive girl," says Miss Beveridge. "She's very responsible. Like, I mean she phones after each assignment and lets us know how things went. And she phoned to make an appointment with me to bring her friend Sharon in—things you'd like an adult volunteer to do."

This is the first time the CNIB here has had such young volunteers although in summer holidays of other years there have been students aged about 15 or 16 helping out.

But Miss Beveridge doesn't want a flood of youthful applicants.

"We aren't able to handle a lot of students as I don't have time to administer them," she explains.

Neither Hilary nor Sharon know of any other students who are doing this kind of work during the strike.

Apart from the CNIB, there must be plenty of other avenues where youthful exuberance and all that time could be put to good use. And there probably are many young people helping out already in various ways. There must be.

If there aren't, there should be.

Bus Service Assured For Month

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Residents of the Happy Valley, Metchosin and Rocky Point areas will continue to have a bus service operated by South West Coach Lines Ltd. for at least another month.

Nearly 50 of them who attended a public hearing Friday called by the B.C. Motor Carrier Commission were told by chairman Paul Sabatino it will probably take that long for commissioners to hand down a decision on the company's application to discontinue service to those areas.

And until then, South West — which claimed during the hearing that it is losing about $70 a day in serving the poorly-patronized rural route — will be required to maintain the run.

Among the petitions and submissions presented during the four-hour hearing, perhaps the strongest criticism of South West's operation and management came from James Golightly, former owner of the company who remained on as manager for one year after he sold it to Watson and Ash of Courtenay in October, 1973.

Golightly claimed in his brief that the declining revenue on the Happy Valley-Metchosin-Rocky Point route was largely due to inferior, unreliable service.

"South West's service in the Metchosin area is exemplified by, among other things, failure of the bus to run when it suits (the company's) convenience to cancel it," he said.

"No need to cover the service, apparently; they're only passengers standing out in the rain waiting to get to work. The buses have been observed running as early as 10 minutes ahead of schedule, and as late as 15 minutes behind.

"Surely there can be no question why the passengers have deserted. The only question is how they (South West) are still able to eke $20 per day from the run."

Golightly charged that the company's buses are "filthy" — two of them had not been washed for seven weeks and showed little sign of inside cleaning — while its "abysmal understanding of maintenance" leads to major breakdowns because simple adjustments and repairs are neglected.

He predicted that South West would also apply in due course to eliminate its runs to Langford and Sooke, where "the same shoddy service is evident."

If the company could not or would not provide a reasonable service its licence, including charter rights, should be revoked and awarded to a competent operator, Golightly argued.

Most objectors at the hearing strongly criticized the present standard of service provided, and claimed that many more people would use the buses if they ran to a reasonably frequent and reliable schedule, providing arrival times in the city to coincide with regular office and business hours.

They expressed concern that almost the entire western community — one of Greater Victoria's fastest-growing areas, with a population of more than 20,000 — would be left without any form of public transportation if the application were approved.

Particularly hard-hit, the commissioners were told, would be many elderly residents, students, housewives in single-car families and those who rely on bus travel for their jobs in the city.

An underlying theme of the hearing was the request that the provincial government extend the capital region transit system into the Colwood-Langford-Metchosin area, but commission chairman Sabatine explained following the hearing that the Motor Carrier Commission can only recommend such a move and has no powers beyond that.

Among the requests for continuation of some form of bus service was one from Jack Mathews, director of the Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific at Pedder Bay.

His letter noted that the 100 students at the college, whose numbers would be doubled by September, need to visit Victoria on a regular basis for study and social services assignments, in addition to social and cultural trips.

As they are not permitted private transportation an attempt is made to meet such needs with the college's own mini-buses, other rented mini-buses and private cars.

South West president Leo Richards told the hearing he acquired the company as an extension to a charter-based bus operations he was developing in the Courtenay area.

Richards said South West lost $40,000 last year and its most uneconomic route is the Happy Valley-Metchosin run where average daily revenue had declined from $27.28 in November to $19.50 currently.

Crash knocked pole over fence

Tel Pole Sheared, Man, 24, Injured

A 24-year-old man is in fair condition in Victoria General Hospital after the car he was driving knocked over a parking meter and severed a telephone pole in the 400 block Belleville early this morning.

Victoria police said the impact sent the pole flying through the air. It came to rest, still standing, on the other side of a six-foot wire mesh fence.

The driver, whose name police have not released, received multiple injuries but all a young male passenger sustained was a sprained finger.

Police said the car had just pulled out of the parking lot on the west exit of the Swiftsure Hotel at 1:25 a.m. and accelerating at a high rate of speed went out of control.

There were more than 200 feet of skid marks at the scene, police said.

A spokesman said charges may be pending.

Parent Rally Set Over Curbed Classes

A group of parents is planning to gather at the legislative buildings Tuesday at 1 p.m. to ask Education Minister Eileen Dailly to restore normal classes to Greater Victoria schools.

Tentative date for the demonstration was decided at a parents' meeting Friday at the Community Action Group office, 551½ Fisgard, called by Sharon MacBain of 1679 Kisber, mother of four school-age children.

About 40 people, including several students, attended the meeting.

"Our schools must remain neutral to ensure the kids their stake in education," Mrs. MacBain told the group.

"The education of our children must take priority over all forms of disputes."

She urged those present to contact all the parents they could before Tuesday so there would be a good turnout at the demonstration.

Some action must be taken before the Easter recess of the legislature next week, said Mrs. MacBain.

"We have to act fast and we have to act strong," she said.

She suggested that the unemployed might be used to clean the schools while school custodians, members of local 382 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, are on strike.

"There are a lot of people who need jobs," she said, "so why can't we use them?"

Parent volunteers have been cleaning schools in the district for two weeks, and the schools have been operating one to three hours daily.

Several other people took up her suggestion, saying that human resources incentive workers might clean the schools.

"Unfortunately there are labor laws against strikebreaking and that would be considered strikebreaking," said one woman, who wouldn't give her name.

A school secretary, a member of CUPE local 947 that has been locked out by Greater Victoria school board, pointed out that of 1,550 people now off work in the Capital Region, only 492 are on strike.

The rest are locked out by their employers, said the woman, who wouldn't give her name.

She asked parents to consider the wisdom of keeping the schools functioning by volunteering to clean them.

"We've had it from top authorities in the school board that as long as the volunteers go in and clean there's no reason to settle," she said.

"They're prepared to be out till the end of April." "The legislature can't help you," she said.

"You go to your municipal leaders and ask them why they've locked people out."

Mrs. MacBain said she hoped the demonstration wouldn't favor one side or the other in the labor dispute.

"We're not against anybody and we're not picking on anybody," she said.

Another woman said she opposed all strikes.

"I'm against any form of legalized blackmail and I don't care who's doing it," she said.

Lill Henderson, a mother who said she's been cleaning schools twice a week as a volunteer, said mothers she's talked to want normal school hours restored but not "at the cost of what the CUPE people are asking for."

No Rush To Polls

Voter turnout was light this morning as Esquimalt voters went to the polls in a municipal byelection to choose a new alderman.

The poll, in the recreation centre at 527 Fraser Street, opened at 8 a.m. today and will close at 8 p.m.

Voters must choose from eight candidates on the ballot.

Mediaeval Inn Open Again

The Mediaeval Inn, 1005 Broad Street, is back in business.

The inn re-opened quietly a week ago after being closed since Jan. 4 because of a labor dispute which had been brewing for almost two years.

The inn was closed after the Labor Relations Board imposed a first contract for employees represented by Local 835 of the Beverage Dispensers' and Culinary Workers' Union.

Manager John MacCarvill said earlier the inn could not afford to pay the wages set out in the contract. The contract provided wages of $2.75 an hour for waitresses plus 17 or 18 per cent for fringe benefits.

Mediaeval employees are still represented by the union, but it is not known what agreement led to the inn re-opening.

The restaurant has been open only for lunch this week but will go into an evening meal schedule as well on Tuesday.

Ulla Spech, a former inn hostess and spokesman for the employees who were against union represenation, said today she has not gone back to work.

"All the union people are there and those who don't want to have anything to do with the union aren't there," she said.

Officials of the inn were not available for comment.

Driver Killed By Cab

Mrs. Diane Tremeer, 3254 Alder, a driver for family-owned Royal Oak taxi, had just picked up an elderly male passenger in the James Bay Lodge, 336 Simcoe, and was walking behind her cab when it suddenly accelerated in reverse.

It thrust her backward about 60 feet into part of a wall and through a window of the lodge. She was killed instantly.

Victoria police were unable to offer any explanation for the freak accident.

A mechanical check is expected to be carried out on the vehicle today.

The fatality was the third in Greater Victoria in the past two days.

On Thursday Jose Cabrita, 45, of 644 Baxter, and his father Yaaguim Cabrita, 75, of Portugal, were killed when their small car collided head-on with a gravel truck on Prospect Lake Road in Saanich.

Irish Poet With an American Twang at UVic

By KIT COLLINS
Times Staff

Back in the early 60s Dubliner James J. McAuley decided to stop slaving for a monthly publication which dealt with the idiosyncracies of electricity.

He headed for America where universities hired writers by the dozens to perambulate around campuses in offbeat clothing and add a touch of intelligentia to the curriculum—or that's how the myth went.

Some 12 years later McAuley, a visiting "Irish" poet at University of Victoria's creative writing department, exudes as much Irish culture as a shamrock nurtured on Arkansas soil.

An American twang pervades his conversation and there's only a whisp of the Irish brogue.

"I haven't got the passionate chauvinism Irish men are known for—and I've no special message for the Irish anymore."

The problem is that 80 per cent of the writers lack the main ingredient of fame they're still alive, says McAuley, estimating that a large following is only 500.

The financial benefits of the profession are just as minimal. The poet has had five collections of poems published for royalties at maximum of $2,000.

So why struggle with the profession?

"I have to write and I have to see it in print. Private writing is a meaningless act."

Financing the art usually means sidelining in the teaching profession. McAuley is head of the creative writing program at East Washington State College, a post he moved to from his first American turf. "And I'm glad to say the program is thriving."

He's had a hand in moulding only half a dozen brilliant writers—"people who will amount to something"—but hopefully he's at least initiated an appreciation in students for the art of writing.

Poems, he says, are never finished. They're abandoned, like kids; you can't raise them any further.

His efforts, published in a variety of journals including the Malahat Review, are dotted with a few obsessions including flight, domesticity and the daily trivia of the household.

"You peel a poem like an onion," says McAuley. "It's designed to be a reflection of its own time."

The publishing market, much to McAuley's discontent, is swamped with how-to do-it books, a reflection of the red-neck mentality in the States that is strangely anti-intellectual.

There's proportionately more appreciation in Canada, he says.

But, back to Ireland.

Ireland is like a Catholic convent with unmatchable rules and regulations to stifle the artist.

If prompted, he'll offer a long harangue on the Irish Civil war; the industrial carpetbaggers, "my kinsman Michael Collins," the double-crosses and his mistake in marrying, and then divorcing, an Irish colleen whose persistence has followed him across the country.

There's bitternesss too. Although it surfaced in just one work—After the Blizzard, currently being re-written—the reaction ultimately moved the writer to follow myths across the ocean where "streets were paved with gold."

So much for the American twang.

The Challenge of Change

MANAGEMENT MEMO

By R. J. CURRIE
P. S. Ross & Partners

With few notable exceptions, the management of business enterprises differs very little today from that of twenty years ago. The changes that have taken place in society have not been reflected to any great extent in many organizations and institutions. Until management is prepared to understand and face up to present day realities, many of the problems it faces will continue to remain unresolved.

There is no question that in specific instances, as for example a capital intensive industry, bigness has its advantages. But in a behavioral or "people" sense, management needs to be very careful.

The efficiency-oriented approach to management which was based on the notion that man is subservient to the machine is at an end. With the high level of achievement of automation of production, coupled with the service orientation of post-industrial society, management needs to move away from pre-occupation with production efficiency.

It no longer works because it does not match the prevailing value system, and because of this it is a less effective way to achieve one of management's basic objectives—profitablity.

Similarly, some of the principles for effective management are fast becoming old fashioned. The imposition of rigid hierarchies, heavy supervision, the authoritarian and control-oriented approach to management has stifled creativity, motivation and the ability to adapt to change.

Management is now faced with two choices. It can either move forward with some changes while more or less operating as it has in the past, or it can take steps which will involve its becoming much more aware of matters outside the organization.

The modern manager must recognize the environmental factors which affect his company. Today's management has to be knowledgeable on such matters as fast changing technologies, special interest groups, consumer affairs, government intervention, inflation, resource shortages, ecological problems and the aspirations of developing countries.

The business organization has to understand and interact with the environment. It has very little control over it but it must organize to live with it.

There is a growing demand in society today for more public services. Many of these, in the areas of health, education and social services, are not related to the traditional market mechanisms and require government intervention.

Government, because of world complexities, must intervene to protect the national interest in social and economic matters. Business organizations should therefore be prepared to move actively and positively towards a closer working relationship with government.

The mixed economy is here to stay; the demand for public-oriented services is here to stay. In all this, there is a role for the private sector in policy formulation and in the delivery of public-initiated programmes. Business should not miss these opportunities. The private sector can play a most effective part while keeping down the numbers of civil servants.

In the context of these broad external issues, information becomes critical. This means information in a two way sense. Business must expand information systems from an almost exclusive emphasis on the production of internal information to that of external data. Management must also be prepared to release more information.

The notion of the public company, which is in reality private, releasing only a minimum of information to shareholders who often have no real control over the business will be unacceptable in the future. The signs of this trend are already in evidence.

Business organizations must be prepared to re-organize, clarify objectives, redefine strategies and policies, revise structures and introduce new resources. The ability to adapt may well be the key to company success in the future. Here are a few of the more significant possibilities:

- The emergence of new positions within the company such as a Vice-President of Government Affairs or a Vice-President, Environmental Information and Studies, i.e. program rather functional managers.
- People will have to be hired who will have concepts and methods quite different to those of the traditional manager.
- Companies will become more creativity oriented. This will allow for a certain amount of executive or administrative slack—the time in which managers are not under constant pressure to produce immediate results. They will look for change; prepare for it, rather than sit back and wait for it.

As part of a more collective approach to decision making, the increasing use of the team approach and similar co-ordinating devices at both the management and operating levels will be necessary. In addition, companies will have to make use of more temporary organizations in the form of task forces employing multi-disciplinary resources from inside and outside the company.

Changes such as these mean that management will have to be prepared at all times to examine its structure, where it stands in relation to its environment, how effective it is in today's terms and prescribe specific re-orientation strategies. Clearly the challenge is there and so are the opportunities.

Interim Manager To Run Tapin

VANCOUVER (CP) — Shareholders of Tapin Copper Mines Ltd. have approved appointment of an interim manager to run the company until legal claims and actions against it have been settled.

Trading in shares of the company was suspended Dec. 19 by the British Columbia superintendent of brokers.

The cease-fire order will continue until company affairs are settled to the satisfaction of the securities commission.

At the annual general meeting Thursday, shareholders appointed chartered accountant Kenneth Mahon as the interim manager.

Mahon said that claims filed against the company, mainly by shareholders, total $457,000. The treasury now contains between $650,000 and $700,000.

The meeting voted against adoption of the financial statements for the year ended Oct. 31, 1974, when a note to the balance sheet was questioned. The note referred to a right of first refusal of Camflo Mines Ltd. for future financing of the Bonanza mining property.

9,766 FIRMS INCORPORATE DURING 1974

The total number of companies incorporated in British Columbia in 1974 was 9,766, 354 more than the number incorporated in 1973.

The figures are contained in the attorney-general department's annual report for the period ending Dec. 31, 1974. The report was tabled in the legislature.

The report says the number of companies incorporated in the province is considered an accurate barometer of business and commercial activity in B.C.

In tabling the report, Attorney-General Alex Macdonald said it was the first annual report ever filed by his department in the province's history.

Thomson, ITU, Await Mediator

VANCOUVER (CP) — Negotiators for the International Typographical Union Local 226 and Thomson British Columbia Newspapers Ltd. are "at the call of the mediator," a union spokesman said Friday.

Ed Fairbairn, chief ITU spokesman, said he could not comment on the status of the talks held Tuesday through Thursday in Kelowna.

Contracts with the ITU at the Kamloops Sentinel, the Nanaimo Free Press, the Kelowna Courier, the Vernon Daily News and the Penticton Herald expired Dec. 31 with a journeyman-printer rate of $6.43 an hour.

Meanwhile, four of Thomson's five B.C. papers did not publish Friday as members of the Vancouver Printing Pressman's Union continued their strike, begun Tuesday at the Sentinel, and refused to handle Thomson copy at the other three newspapers. The Courier published Tuesday but has not published since.

The Nanaimo Free Press has a contract with a different pressmen's union and has remained unaffected.

Pressmen were paid $6.55 an hour in two-year contracts that expired Dec. 31 in Kamloops and Feb. 28 in Kelowna and Penticton. Vernon's contract expires June 30.

A spokesman for the Thomson group said they have been told by David MacIntyre, the pressmen's business representative, the pressmen will not meet with the group until the ITU dispute concerning a reproduction clause is settled.

Normally, a Thomson spokesman said, the ITU contract is settled before the pressmen begin negotiations.

Coffee Cartel Grinds to Halt

RIO DE JANEIRO (WP) — Ambitious plans by coffee-producing nations to set up an oil-style cartel have flopped.

Prices are falling. Coffee-drinking countries have big stockpiles. And this year, for the first time since 1966, world coffee production is expected to run ahead of consumption.

The once tough-talking coffee producers appear ready to renegotiate a long-term international agreement for regulating prices and exports.

There used to be such an agreement — which protected the producers from economy-straining price rises and falls and which guaranteed importing countries a steady, moderately priced supply — but it expired in 1973.

This happened mainly because of irreconcilable differences between Brazil, the world's No. 1 coffee grower, and the United States, the world's biggest importer.

Brazil's top government coffee official, Camilo Calazans de Magalhaes is in the United States to explore with U.S. officials and coffee industry executives the possibility of renewing the world-wide pact.

When the old agreement expired, coffee prices had nearly returned to the record levels of the early 1950s and were headed even higher.

By mid-1974, Brazilian coffee hit an all-time high. New York dock price of 80 cents a pound — compared with 47 cents in 1972. Colombian coffee was at a record 82 cents, arid Central American varieties peaked at 75 cents.

Brazil, Colombia, the Ivory Coast and Angola — which account for more than 60 per cent of world production — decided to capitalize on the sellers's market and formed a Paris-based multinational company whose function was to drive prices up further by stratetegically buying and stockpiling coffee.

The Central American countries, backed by money from oil-rich Venezuela, set up a similar firm.

Then the producers made a gentlemen's agreement to hold back 20 per cent of the 1974-75 crop from the world market in an effort to force prices up even more.

None of these tactics worked.

Brazilian and Colombian coffees are back to their 1973 price levels and falling. Central America coffee has dropped to 55 cents a pound, 8 cents less than when the international agreement ended.

An economist in Rio with knowledge of the inside workings of international coffee buying and selling explained what went wrong: "The producers realized they could not alter the basic structure of the market. They found out that the main risk in trying to form a cartel is that it exposes them to wild price fluctuations. And since many coffee-producing countries have fragile economies which depend heavily on this one product, that is the last thing they want."

Several other factors contributed to the coffee market's turnabout. There were no serious storms or frosts on coffee plantations last year, and everybody had good crops. High world prices stimulated individual farmers to plant even more coffee.

While Brazil was holding out for higher prices, refusing to export its coffee for less, the Central American countries, which never stockpiled coffee before, couldn't resist the temptation of the market opening and started selling.

Farmers in Angola, unsure of what would happen next because of the revolution in Portugal, also decided that the wisest policy was to sell fast.

Then Colombia panicked and began unloading coffee.

Finally, Brazil, which must keep its exports as high as possible to offset the enormous cost of emported crude oil, gave in and lowered its prices.

"All the producers are suffering," the Rio coffee executive stated, "but I believe the United States basically favors supporting coffee-producing countries and will sign a new international agreement if the terms are reasonable."

Appeal Succeeds

An appeal by George Wilks, 1287 Halloway, against an impaired driving conviction was uphled in county court Friday.

Judge William McClelland said he was not convinced the evidence proved Wilks was impaired in a driving incident June 30 although there was evidence he could have been charged with driving while blood-alcohol level was above .08, or without due care and attention "or even dangerous driving."

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Judge William Ostler sentenced an 18-year-old youth to three months in jail and placed him on 18 months probation when he appeared in Victoria provincial court Friday on two counts of breaking and entering with intent.

Brian Jeffrey Quatsch, of 628 Raynor, had pleaded guilty March 11 to a Dec. 15 break-in at Cook Street Fish and Chips, 252 Cook.

He had also been charged with breaking and entering and theft at Fairfield Plaza Service Station, 1518 Fairfield, Jan. 31, but the charge was changed Friday to read breaking and entering with intent, to which Quatsch pleaded guilty.

Barry George Rae, 32, of 2523 Wark, pleaded guilty to unlawful presence in a dwelling and possession of a weapon dangerous to public peace.

Prosecutor Clarence Vause said police, who went to 879 Esquimalt in response to a telephone call for help March 13, found two women crying hysterically.

They told police that when they returned home that evening, they found Rae, standing in the apartment brandishing a breadknife with a 7½ inch blade.

But the screams of the women attracted the block manager and no one was harmed.

Robert Zeilstra, 19, of 640 Marigold, was remanded to April 18 for psychiatric observation at Riverview on the lower mainland.

Zeilstra was charged Thursday with breaking and entering and theft at the office of Dr. Joseph Haegert, 1900 Fernwood, Fernwood Community Clinic, on March 13.

He was also charged with possession of a weapon or imitation weapon dangerous to public peace by aiming a toy revolver at a woman March 14 at the intersection of Interurban and Marigold.

Aidan Alphonsus Browne, 26, of 551 Manchester, charged with possession of MDA for the purpose of traffickng and possession of hashish, elected trial by judge without jury for both counts.

He was released on recognizance in the sum of $750 with one or two sureties and remanded to May 13 for hearing.

A no-publication ban was ordered on bail discussions.

Two men received fines after pleading guilty to separate charges of possession of stolen property.

Allen William Blyth, 42, of 1340 Sussex, was fined $250 for having possession of two radial tires valued at $120 which had been reported stolen March 20.

Donald Ingbritson, 24, of 1331 Pandora, received a $200 fine for buying a 24-horsepower motor which he knew to have been stolen.

David Cameron, 22, of 1575 Begbie, pleaded to the charge of theft under $200.

He received a suspended sentence and was placed on six months probation.

Sharon Carlsen, 29, of 2644 Prior, was fined $350 after pleading guilty to impaired driving.

Vause said a patrol car, with its red light flashing, followed her vehicle for two blocks Friday and had to pull alongside and honk their horn several times before she finally stopped.

LIBERALS ACCUSED OF FILIBUSTER

Debate on predicted spending in the premier's office started Monday and so far has taken 22 hours. Limit on debate for all government departments is 135 hours.

"You're planning to stall the vote (on the premier's office) until next week," said Barrett as Friday's morning sitting drew to a close.

"We've got the word on the strategy of you guys — you got a phone call from Ottawa (The Federal Liberal party)," said Barrett, declining to elaborate.

The Liberal members have dominated much of the week's debate with discussion on the government's natural gas policy, charging Barrett has not taken a strong enough stand on natural gas export price increases.

Gordon Gibson (L-North Vancouver-Capilano) said the premier had charged the Liberals with "an awful thing — he said we had a strategy."

He refuted Barrett's charges, saying Barrett had evaded Liberal questions all week.

'Little New' From Mine Men

Mines Minister Leo Nimsick termed unproductive a meeting this week between the government and mining industry representatives seeking changes in provincial legislation.

Nimsick said in an interview Friday little new information and few detailed proposals for changing existing mining legislation was provided by the industry.

The delegation represented the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines and the Mining Association of B.C.

Earlier, the same group had met "with cabinet and Nimsick and was requested to return with a set of specific proposals for changing legislation.

"The information they brought over was not in detail. I think they'd like to go back to where they were before . . . and have the management of the resources in their hands instead of the hands of the department," said Nimsick.

The biggest worry of the mining people, said Nimsick, is the discretionary powers granted the minister.

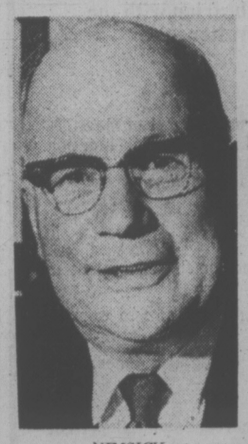
They also want to get away from the royalties established by the NDP and set up some other system of taxation, he said.

Their proposals will be forwarded to Premnier Barrett and to the cabinet for discussion, said Nimsick, adding, however, that he considered them "very, very limited."

Fredrick G. Higgs, manager of the chamber, said the men do not expect to be called back in the near future.

"The minister and his staff will need time to study our proposals, but we met his request to return as quickly as possible with comprehensive suggestions," he aid.

The proposals are not final, he said, but some could be done immediately to reveal some of the serious economic problems in the mining industry.



NIMSICK

COMMISSIONER: $350 PER DAY

The provincial government's industrial inquiry commissioner investigating the Vancouver school board labor dispute, will be paid $350 a day.

The salary was released in cabinet orders Friday, the day following Clive McKee's appointment by Labor Minister Bill King. A commissioner is required to make recommendations to settle the two-week dispute within 14 days.
settle the two-week dispute within 14 days.

The cabinet order also released the same salary for Dalton L. Larson, commissioner for the B.C. Rail dispute which ended early in January.

Also announced were expansions to the civil service in several departments:

Four positions will be added to the human resources department, including a project manager, clerk accountant and administrative officer; 13 for B.C. Ferries, including an information officer and 12 clerk positions.

Monthly cost to the human resources department is $5,341 and salaries for positions in B.C. Ferries total $8,904 a month.

UVic Governors Named

Eight appointments to the University of Victoria board of governors were ratified by cabinet this week.

The three-year appointments which take effect April 1 include one representative from Ladysmith, J. E. Whitlam.

Others, some of which were re-appointments are: Larry Ryan, M. D. Phillips, A. McCallum, Barry Riseborough, A. Hall, S. J. Cunliffe and Heather Nicol, all of Victoria.

Deadline Extended

The deadline for applications for the homeowner grant has been extended to March 31 by the provincial department of housing.

All resident homeowners are eligible for between $20 to $40 in addition to the $200 homeowner grant to help defray the cost of school taxes.

Resident homeowners aged 65 and over are also eligibile for an additional $50.

Application forms are on the reverse side of property tax bills and should be forwarded to the municipal tax collector.

Training Project In Industry

The provincial government has granted approval to Labor Minister Bill King to enter into an agreement with Babine Forest Products Ltd. to provide occupational training programs.

A cabinet order-in-council, released Friday, says the total cost of the programs shall not exceed $325,000.

The order states that the minister felt it would be beneficial to set up such programs for the people in the Burns Lake area and that he has the authority to do so, with cabinet approval, under the provisions of the Special Provincial Employment Programs Act.

Ferry Union Seeks Lunch Money

NANAIMO (CP) — If members of the B.C. Ferry Workers' Union are not paid meal allowances owed to them for overtime worked last summer, hours of work and conditions of employment may be re-negotiated, a union spokesman said Friday.

Norm Thornburgh, a union business agent, said it appears B.C. Ferries is attempting to exclude the marine services general component from certain clauses of the master agreement that took effect July 1, 1974.

Thornburgh said although some workers received meal money in January, the majority received notice that payment was frozen until a decision is reached on what constitutes scheduled working hours.

Playoff Scene Set by Cats

Victoria Cougars, needing only a tie tonight at Memorial Arena against Regina Pats to nail down their first divisional title in the Western Canada Hockey League announced Friday they will open their playoffs at home next Saturday.

Cougars' likely opponent will be Kamloops Chiefs, almost certain to finish fourth in the Western Division behind Victoria, Medicine Hat Tigers and New Westminster Bruins. Second game in the best-of-seven semi-final would be in Kamloops.

The only way the playoff could change is if the Bruins, three points ahead of Kamloops, slip to fourth or if Edmonton Oil Kings, eight points behind the Chiefs, win their last four games to make the playoffs.

If Cougars' first-round opponents turn out to be the Bruins, the second game will be in New Westminster. If it's the Oil Kings, the first two playoff games will be at Memorial Arena.

Friday's WCHL results put Edmonton squarely behind the eight-ball as Medicine Hat edged the Oil Kings 7-6. The win kept alive Tigers' hopes of tying Cougars for first place, but it would take a miracle. Medicine Hat must win all four of its remaining games while Victoria loses it's last four encounters, including tonight's affair against Regina starting at 8:30.

Pats don't figure to be pushovers. They have three games left and are tied for second place in the Eastern Division with Lethbridge Broncos.

Tonight is fan appreciation night at Memorial. Cougars, who have drawn 96,587 in their first 32 home games, will give away a number of prizes to fans attending tonight.

Tigers' Don Murdoch fired two goals Friday, running his season total to 81, to end Oil King's home-ice victory streak at 11. The Pats, meanwhile, dropped a 6-1 decision in New Westminster while Saskatoon Blades thumped Winnipeg Clubs 9-2.

Gary Proves Value As Towhees Toppled

By D'ARCY KAVANAGH
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — There has been a lot of talk at the 30th annual B.C. high school boys' basketball tournament about who will get the nod as most valuable player.

Much of the attention has centred on Point Grey Greyhounds' Howard Kelsey, who has scored 98 points in three games and will likely shatter at least two tournament scoring records today when his team plays Abbotsford Panthers for fifth place.

Other impressive performances have come from Chris Hebb of Prince Rupert Rainmakers, six-foot-nine Kirk Randa of North Surrey Spartans, Adam Yawrenko of the Panthers and North Delta Huskies' Wayne Corness and Brad Clarke. Larry Dalziel of Oak Bay Bays also has played well.

But the one player who might upset them all for the MVP trophy is Richmond Colts' Gary Emmerson and Friday at the Pacific Coliseum, he showed why.

Despite a slight muscle pull in his left leg, the 6'5" centre scored 19 points, second to team-mate Chuck McIntosh's 30, as the Colts downed Georges P. Vanier Towhees of Courtenay 78-62 in a semi-final contest before nearly 4,000 fans.

More important than his point total, Emmerson was invincible on the boards and often led the Colts' attack with superb ball handling. He was also the team leader on defence.

It's mainly because of Emmerson that the Colts, third-ranked on the Lower Mainland coming into this tournament, will make their first-ever appearance in a B.C. basketball final when they play North Delta tonight at 9 in the Coliseum.

Huskies made it by edging North Surrey Spartans 52-51 on two foul shots in the last 15 seconds by Mike Kenis.

Oak Bay, the other Island club left in the tournament, rallied to edge Templeton Titans 59-56 in the consolation round. The Bays today played Argyle Pipers, 73-71 winners over Prince Rupert, to decide fourth place.

The Colts had their troubles with the pesky Towhee defence in the first quarter and managed only a 21-18 lead. The second quarter, however, was another story as Richmond opened the inside of the Courtenay defence and took a 37-27 lead at the half.

Against Templeton, the Bays fell behind 10-0 after three minutes and it wasn't until late in the fourth quarter that they took the lead for good.

"I was certainly shaken when the Titans came out so strongly and took that quick lead," Bays' coach Don Horwood said. "The boys just weren't ready at the start.

"They were obviously flat after the loss (61-54) last night to North Delta. You come here to go for the whole thing and when you lose, it's tough to play in the consolation round. I'm pleased, though, that we came back to win today."

With forward Mark Higgins out with a dislocated right shoulder, the result of a spill against North Delta, Horwood also lost guard Charlie Fisher with a twisted ankle suffered early in the first quarter Friday. It was not known if Fisher would be able to play today.

Dalziel topped the Bays with 23 points while teammates Steve Leung and Steve Pescod added 11 and 10 points respectively.

SEMI-FINAL

COURTENAY (62) — Grant Giles, David Kent 6, Randy Standish 4, Greg Ward, Bill Miner, Lorne Ross, Brian Shaw 6, David Lee 20, Jamie Graham 9, David Larison 15, John Watson 4.

NORTH DELTA (52) — Sharpe 6, Buis 8, Kenis 14, Corness 16, Fitzpatrick 2, Ennis 6, Fiefie, Jones, Steele, Dunbar, Watts.

NORTH SURREY (51) — Cahill 5, Scanlon 4, Reich 12, Olson 5, Randa 25, Kelly, Dudley, Richardson, Lawrence, Fitcher.

CONSOLATION ROUND

TEMPLETON (56) — Randy Coutts, Danny Lenarduzzi, Keith Krenz, Glen Fung, Gino Bigiolli, Terry Burke 8, Dino Rosa 14, Dennis Zaballero 6, Danny Huclack 10, Andy Bigiolli, Gordie McCartney 11, John Baglio 7, Terry Bingley.

OTHER GAMES

Point Grey 84, Castlegar 65.
Argyle 73, Prince Rupert 71.

SURROUNDED by team-mates and opponents, Glynis McFerran (4) of First United Unitys crouches for bounce pass in Friday's Vancouver Island and B.C. juvenile girls' basketball championship tournament at Claremont High. In on play are Julie St. Cyr (7) of Lake Cowichan Satellites, Adele Clark (41) and Marie Morrison (14) of Unitys. First United won 47-22. In another game, Cordova Bay downed London Boxing Club 48-36. Tourney continues today and if playoff is needed, it's scheduled tonight at 8:30.

SACK OF ATLANTA? IT'S THE OPPOSITE

By The Canadian Press

Keith McCreary, who scored a team record four goals, was talking playoffs after Atlanta Flames had demolished Vancouver Canucks 12-4 along with a handful of team records Friday night.

The Flames' National Hockey League victory gave them a 30-29-13 record and 73 points, five fewer than New York Islanders in the battle for a Patrick Division playoff berth.

Vancouver, 34-31-8, leads the Smythe Division and St. Louis Blues missed a chance to move to within one point of the Canucks by dropping a 7-4 loss to California Seals in Friday's only other NHL game.

"If we can put it together now, we can still make the playoffs," said McCreary. "The morale is great, and I think we'll play progressively better every game."

Besides McCreary's one-game individual record, the Flames' 12 goals set a team mark; Tom Lysiak had a goal and three assists to top his year-old season-point record, and the 16 goals for both teams was a new high for a game played at Atltanta's Omni.

That point-total was only one above the 15 scored Wednesday night when the Flames beat Toronto 8-7.

KEITH McCREARY
. . . fires four goals

There was nothing close about Friday's game as the Flames took a 4-0 first-period lead and held control all the way.

Lysiak's four points gave him 68 for the season on 21 goals and 47 assists. His old mark was 64.

Rey Comeau, Curt Bennett and Buster Harvey added scores for the Flames, and Don Lever had one for Vancouver.

California's Joey Johnston scored once and assisted on two other goals to lead the Seals against the Blues.

Johnston got his goal at 17:55 of the third period and assisted on goals by rookies Rick Hampton and Al MacAdam.

Norwegian Flub Eases Worries of Canadians

PERTH, Scotland (CP) — Bill Tetley frankly admitted he was a worried man as he sweated through the middle ends of Canada's game with Norway at the world curling championships Friday.

He dearly wanted a victory that would give a first-place finish in the 10-team round-robin and another shot at Switzerland in tonight's semi-final round.

He got it but it wasn't easy.

Trailing by 6-2 after six ends, the Canadian rink from Thunder Bay, counted one each in the seventh and eighth to make it 6-4. Then in the ninth, Tetley watched anxiously as the final Norwegian rock missed to give Canada a big four.

That was enough for a cliff-hanging 8-7 win that gave Canada a record of seven wins and two losses. The defending-champion United States and Sweden wound up with similar records but Canada took first place because it had beaten both of them. And Sweden's Axel Kamp took second on the strength of an easy victory over Ed Risling's Seattle foursome.

Switzerland's Otto Danieli rink, which defeated Canada and had held first place for much of the round-robin competition, thrashed French champion Andre Tronc, 9-3, in eight ends to finish with a 6-and-3 record, good for fourth place.

Canada meets Switzerland in one semi-final today while Sweden goes against the U.S. in the other. The survivors meet in Sunday's final at the same time.

Tetley has insisted all week that his rink's biggest problem was the skip. He has been erratic as have lead Pete Hnatiw and second Bill Hodgson while third Rick Lang has been brilliant and has been described by some European scribes as the best curler here.

"I know I've been playing poorly but Rick has been just super. He was out there again today. In fact, we were better than they were from lead through third."

Southwark Star Wins In Handicap Surprise

DONCASTER, England (Reuter) — Southwark Star was the surprise winner in the Lincoln Handicap run over one mile here today. The Irish Hospital Sweepstakes is based on this race.

Official starting prices were: 33-1 Southwork Star; 8-1 Flying Nelly; 11-1 Dawlish. Kunpuu finished fourth at 25-1 and Swanee River was the 13-2 favorite.

Southwark Star won by 1½ lengths with six lengths between second and third. The race was worth $23,100 with the winning owner receiving $14,425.

Playoffs No. 1 On Hull's List

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Bobby Hull and the Winnipeg Jets redeemed themselves Friday night and moved back into the thick of the battle for a wild-card berth in the World Hockey Association playoffs.

With Hull picking up a goal and two assists to become the highest single-season point-producer in WHA history, the Jets turned on the power in the third period to score a 6-3 victory over New England Whalers in Friday's only scheduled WHA game.

Hull now has 127 points on 69 goals and 58 assists to wipe out the old record of 124 points that San Diego's Andre Lacroix set two seasons ago.

"The record doesn't mean that much to me," said Hull. "The important thing is for us to make the playoffs. This was a big win for us. We played poorly the last time we were here but we redeemed ourselves tonight."

The victory gives the Jets a 33-31-4 record, good for 81 points and third place in the Canadian Division. The Whalers, who clinched the East Division title earlier this week, are 38-26-5.

Taking a back seat to Hull was Winnipeg right winger Anders Hedberg, who scored three times, including a pair of goals in the third period when the Jets outscored the Whalers 4-1. The teams were tied 2-2 going into the final period.

WINNIPEG (6) — Anders Hedberg (43rd, 44th, 45th), Danny Spring (17th), Bobby Hull (69th), Perry Miller 4th); NEW ENGLAND (3) — Wayne Carleton (32nd), Ron Climie (20th), Mike Byers (18th). Attendance 10,507.

Surprise Cheque For Rauch

TORONTO (CP) — A cheque for $35,000 is on the way to John Rauch from Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League but it may come as a surprise to the club's former coach.

Rauch was fired last October with a year remaining on his three-year contract and the Argos were bound to pay him the $35,000 representing his final year's salary.

When Rauch took a job as an assistant coach with Atlanta Falcons of the National Football League, the Argos advised him he could not collect on the final year of his contract with them.

Rauch, under the impression that he would forfeit his pay only if he took another job in the CFL, was angered. But before he could make an issue of it, the Argo executive reconsidered and decided to pay him off anyway.

Ducky Ignited Fruit Shower

UPI-AP

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Joe (Ducky) Medwick, one of the top right-handed hitters in baseball history, died early Friday of a massive heart attack.

The 63-year-old Medwick, inducted into baseball's Hall of Fame in 1968, was serving as minor-league batting instructor for St. Louis Cardinals at their spring training base here. He was taken to a medical centre Thursday night after complaining of chest pains. He died a few hours later.

A top slugger with the Gas House Gang from 1932 until 1940, Medwick won the triple crown in 1937, leading the National League with a batting average of .374, driving in 154 runs and hitting 31 home runs. In addition, he led the league in runs scored with 111, in hits with 237 and in doubles with 56, and was named the league's most valuable player.

He compiled a career batting average of .324 with 2471 hits including 205 homers. But he is remembered as well for his strange nickname and the near riot he was involved in during the 1934 world series as he is for his batting accomplishments.

The nickname came from the way he walked. The riot came from the way he played.

Medwick batted .371 in the 1934 series which the Cardinals won in seven games against Detroit. In the seventh game, Medwick slid hard into third baseman Marv Owen and both players came up punching.

When Medwick went to the outfield, Detroit fans began pelting him with fruit and other debris, delaying the game. Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis ordered Medwick removed from the game so play could continue. Even without Medwick, the Cardinals clinched the series, winning the game, 11-0, behind Dizzy Dean.

The True Professional And Mod Sod Don't Mix

The end of the week, and it's a fact of life that the true professional soccer player wants nothing to do with artificial turf. The authority is Canada's national coach Eckhard Krautzan. In his considered opinion, artificial, or tartan turf, is the worst thing that ever happened to soccer, because only on natural terrain can stamina be developed; and besides, the incidence of injuries is so much higher on artificial turf that international players just don't want to take the chance even in exhibition matches.

Krautzan also indicated he had suggested to GM Denny Veitch of the Vancouver Whitecaps that they should build their own stadium and use natural grass and only then would the game be a success. He doesn't think, either, that the North American Soccer League is truly first-class by international standards. Another suggestion he has for soccer, especially in B.C., is for the season to start earlier and finish later because, after all, soccer is really a year-round game and, as B.C. is the only province where it can be played outdoors in the winter, why not take advantage of it. Only in this way, playing on all types of fields, and in all kinds of weather, can a player develop properly. On artificial turf you can never have that advantage.

However, the Whitecaps have no choice. Empire Stadium is their home and so is tartan turf, and now they are reaching out into the hinterlands looking for support. Dennis Lewis, a B.C. Soccer League executive, was in town during the week, explaining the workings of the Whitecaps Soccer Supporters Club, which basically is a fan club promotion with the purpose of stimulating interest in soccer, and in the Whitecaps, and offering special bonuses for memberships therein. Doug Day, president of the Vancouver Island Soccer League, has the details.

It's probably incidental, but the Whitecaps lost $160,000 last season . . . Meanwhile, in major league baseball, despite the economic problems, 12 of the 24 major league clubs have reported advance ticket sales ahead of last year and four others are even with the 1974 pace . . . And, for whatever it is worth, the Los Angeles Dodgers, who have not increased ticket prices in their 18 years on the West Coast, attracted 2,632,474 fans last year, and Dodger officials believe that a three million figure is attainable this season . . . And for those who may have wondered, the B.C. Sports Federation's Sports Holiday Draw has earned more than one-quarter million dollars for amateur sport during the past six years.

Speaking of season ticket prices, the B.C. Lions have upped the ante. The top priced seats are increased $1.25 to $8.75, all others by $1. The explanation is simple enough. They need the money. But one reason the Lions' situation is unique is that they don't have the number of seats between the goal lines that some other teams have. The Lions only have 16,000 seats. Toronto will have 45,000 this fall, Ottawa and Calgary about 30,000 each; and there's no way they are going to get more in Empire Stadium. Thus the increase is necessary . . . And Bill Garner of the B.C. High School Basketball Association would like it known that the draw for the B.C. tournament wasn't changed this year because another official suggested some clubs were suspected of playing for positions. There were other factors involved. And that should make everyone feel better.

Otherwise, a round of applause is due today for Flora Martin and her Victoria Curling Club rink of Betty Stubbs, Edna Messum and Doreen Baker for winning their second consecutive national senior ladies' title this week. One such championship is usually a lifetime dream come true. But two! And surely, the Martin rink must now rank as a leading contender for the B.C. Sports Federation master classification award next spring, an honor they barely missed this year . . . And for the auto racing buffs, who wish to meet Canada's Cinderella driver, Earl Ross, there are tickets available for Tuesday's lunch at the Tally Ho Travelodge . . . Check with Barry Rankin at Western . . .

Please add to the list of things people can do without, as published this week, regarding rowing, and with the no-fault clause in effect.

Women's Singles (500 metres): 1. Brentwood College (rower unidentified) 3:23.

Okay! Maybe this unidentified girl went by the judges so quickly that nobody could recognize her. But if so, all the more reason a check should have been made. At any rate, if the girl made the effort, it seems only fair she be recognized, which hereby she is. Her name is Barbara Sutherland, and hopefully the oversight, by whoever, is rectified.

G'nite all. And a happy Easter week to you too.

Speedskating's a Family Affair

Jim Shields measures ice surface

By D'ARCY KAVANAGH
Times Sports

Jim Shields isn't your ordinary speedskating enthusiast..

Instead of just watching from the sidelines, the 45-year-old Victoria resident works extensively for the sport. He's not only founder of the Esquimalt Speed Skating Club, but is also its president, coach and chief booster.

Speedskating, however, is a family affair with Shields. Jim's wife Coleen, a former skater, is the club's secretary and often helps with coaching duties. Son David, 16, and daughter Brenda, 10, are potential stars. Another son, Les, 18, isn't a skater but he did give it a try.

"Some people fish, others hunt and some collect stamps, our hobby is speedskating," says Jim, who often digs into his own pockets to pay club expenses for training and travel.

He has been especially busy the last ten weeks because the Canadian indoor championships are going to be held March 29 and 30 at Memorial Arena.

Jim Shields, of course.

"I've had a lot of good help from parents and this is going to be a big event for us. I'm so keyed up for it I'm not even tired yet," he commented.

He should be feeling the strain, though. Every day after work, Shields and his wife work on arrangements for the championships until 11 p.m. They do everything from filling entries to scheduling heats to booking hotel rooms. Weekends are usually reserved for club trips.

The championships, expected to attract about 200 entrants, were originally slated for Esquimalt Sports Centre, but that facility was forced to close last month because of the Canadian Union of Public Employees' (CUPE) strike.

"We had a few tense times when the Esquimalt rink was closed, but we hustled and managed to get Memorial Arena," sighed Shields.

Jim is currently suffering his biggest headache as a coach. With most area arenas shut down, his skaters have had little time on ice and it has hurt.

"The kids just aren't mentally prepared for the championships. They haven't got the necessary confidence because they've done almost no skating these past few weeks," he said.

Due to the lack of ice time, Shields has been working his charges hard with outdoor training in hopes that "our conditioning will match the other skaters' finesse."

But he doesn't mind the the problems because his love affair with speedskating has lasted nearly 40 years. A native of Saskatoon, he was too small (he's five-six and 145 pounds now) for hockey — "I took an awful beating in the corners" — so he tried speedskating.

After eight years of competition, during which time he won three Saskatchewan provincial titles, he retired in 1952 and joined the Canadian navy, in which he still serves as a petty officer.

But his career as a skater wasn't over.

In 1967, a year after he established the Esquimalt club, Shields took five of his skaters to the B.C. championships at Fort St. John. Under the strong urging of his charges, he entered the senior men's event and surprised himself and others by winning.

"I always skate with the kids when I coach them, so I was in pretty good shape. But was I ever surprised when I won," he said.

Proving that victory was no fluke, Shields captured the Canadian senior men's indoor championship two weeks later at Fort St. John. He hasn't raced since, preferring to coach and be an administrator.

"I loved skating as a competitor, but I enjoy it every bit as much, if not more, as a coach. I feel as if I'm doing something for the kids and that gives me a big thrill."

How long a break?

"About a week. Then I'll be coaching the Gordon Head girls' baseball team."

Ahead by Three, Barney Avoids Definite Target

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Barney Thompson, who has yet to win in two years of tour activity, has no definite goal going into today's third round of the $150,000 Greater Jacksonville open golf tournament.

"I'll just try to play another good round," said Thompson, whose six-under-par 66 gave him the 36-hole lead.

Arnold Palmer, who has won 61 times in 21 years of tour activity, has a very definite goal.

"I've had two rounds that were fair to good," said Palmer. "Now I've got to have two rounds that are really good."

Palmer, still one of the game's great attractions despite a long, frustrating slump, birdied four of five holes at one stretch on his way to a second consecutive 68 that left him three strokes back of Thompson.

"For a while I felt like I was going to birdie every hole," said Palmer. "And that's the feeling you've got to have."

He said his confidence, at an ebb during his troubles of last season is building to a peak.

Tom Shaw came on with a 67 and was third at 137, seven under par for two trips over the 7,143-yard Deerwood Country Club course and four behind Thompson.

The group at 138 was made up of U.S. amateur champion Jerry Pate, Dave Stockton, Jerry McGee, Joe Inman, Peter Oosterhuis of England and Bobby Cole of South Africa.

Oosterhuis matched Thompson's 66 as the best round of the tournament. Pate, McGee and Inman had 68s, Stockton and Cole 69s.

Mac McLendon, a co-leader in the first round, went to a 72 and 139. Lee Elder had a 73 and was well back at 141.

Three Canadians failed to make the 146 cutoff for the final two rounds. Wilf Homenuik of Winnipeg shot a 74 for 147, George Knudson of Toronto had a 75 for 148 and Ben Kern of Toronto shot a 72 for 149.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Sizzling middle game of 245 sparked Don Norbury to victory in men's tenpin division during 22nd week of annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest. Competing in Wednesday Men's Commercial League at Mayfair Lanes, Don sandwiched his 245 tally between games of 178 and 214 to finish with 637 total that earned him weekly award.

Moore Collects Curling Crown

VANCOUVER — Gordie Moore's Victoria Curling Club entry leads four Pacific Coast Association rinks into the B.C. men's senior championships starting at the Victoria Curling Club Sunday.

Moore skipped his rink of Bill Purdy, Jack Paar and Bert Edmonds to the PCCA title Friday by winning a four-rink, sudden-death playoff.

The four Coast rinks join four survivors from the B.C. Curling Association in a round-robin competition for the B.C. title beginning Sunday at 8 p.m. and continuing with draws at 9:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Moore won the Philp Trophy, emblamatic of the Coast crown, by posting victories Friday over Gordon Hewgill of the Marpole Curling Club and Joe Hadfield of Chilliwack. He beat Hewgill, the Lower Mainland champion, 9-4 by pulling away on the late ends and then edged Hadfield, the Fraser Valley representative, 9-8. Hadfield reached the final with a 9-6 victory over Jerry Goroz of Courtenay.

Victorians Advance

Mike Greenwood and Phil Green both posted 3-0 triumphs in the men's "A" division, Greenwood beating Brian Jones of Vancouver and Green downing Larry Ellsmore, also of Vancouver.

Two Victoria women dropped their first-round matches, Vivian Irving losing in womens' "B" and Irene Cockayne bowing in women's

Spartans Pad Rugby Margin

Claremont Spartans increased their lead to four points in the West Division of the Victoria High School Rugby League Friday night by beating the visiting Vic High Titans 13-3.

Spectrum, meanwhile, moved within three points of third-place Vic High by defeating Mt. Douglas Mountainmen 23-17 at Royal Athletic Park.

Gerry Doney and Gordie Horth each counted a try for Claremont while Paul Molholm kicked a convert and penalty goal. Titans' points came on a Kym Clark penalty goal in the second half.

POWER FAILURE HALTS PLAYOFF AT NANAIMO

Kelowna Buckaroos have advanced to the British Columbia Junior Hockey League final by downing Vernon Vikings 9-5 Friday at Vernon.

The Buckaroos swept the best-of-seven final series in four games.

Kelowna now will meet the winner of the semi-final between Bellingham Blazers and Nanaimo Clippers. A game set for Friday in Nanaimo was postponed because of a power failure at the arena. Bellingham leads the series 3-2.

Buckaroos, who led 5-0 after the first period and 8-1 after the second, got two goals each from Bill Haynes, Rick Benningshoff and Duane Monteith.

CBC to Televise 21 Expo Games

City Midgets Among First-Round Winners

Victoria, Fuller Lake and Nanaimo got the jump in Vancouver Island minor hockey championship play Friday.

Victoria and Fuller Lake scored opening-round victories in the midget chapionships in Chemainus while Nanaimo scored four first-period goals en route to a 6-1 victory over Port Alberni in the bantam tournament in Nanaimo.

Les Akenclose and Bill Dawes scored twice each for Nanaimo with Jeff Wylie and Kevin Cowie adding singles. Doug Lalonde scored Alberni's goal in the third period.

Victoria and Saanich also are involved in the bantam tournament, which winds up Sunday in Nanaimo.

In midget play, Victoria downed Port Alberni 9-6 with George Fritz, Robbie Rees and Mike Shields counting two goals each and Ken Wilson, Geordie Robertson and Wayne Proceviat scoring one apiece. Alberni marksmen were Richard More and Ron Brooks with two each and Allan McVey and Mickey Ransom.

Fuller Lake beat Comox Bantams 7-1 on two-goal performances by Glen Knapett and Wayne Wrigglesworth and singles by Greg Hollett, Steve Mitchell and Doug Simpson. The Comox goal went to Steve Sleigh.

In the Vancouver Island peewee championships Friday at the Racquet Club, Juan de Fuca defeated Racquet Club 4-2 on three goals by Jeff Stouffer and one by Doug Barnes. RCV goals went to Blair Larsen and Mark Greir.

In a second game Friday, Port Alberni emerged as the favorite by beating Nanaimo 5-1. John Newberry scored three times for the winners with Kim Collins counting the other two goals. Nanaimo's goal was scored by Doug Sibbet.

The tournament continues with two games today and winds up with Sunday games at 6 and 8:15 a.m.

Angels Topple Cubs But Anger Remains

By The Associated Press

Chicago Cubs refused to let California Angels use designated hitters in place of their pitchers in Friday's exhibition baseball game and the move backfired.

Charlie Hudson, the second California pitcher forced to come to bat in the fourth inning, hit a two-out single off Ken Frailing and Joe Lahoud followed with a two-run homer that gave the Angels a 4-1 lead.

They went on to a 6-4 triumph but even the victory and the last laugh didn't do much for manager Dick Williams' disposition.

"It's like saying if we don't play by their rules they'll take their ball and go home," he seethed. "We're not forcing them to use the rule, but I can't understand why we can't use a rule which applies to us during the season."

The American League clubs, who use designated hitters during their regular season, may use them in exhibition games against National League clubs only if the National club approves.

Elsewhere, the day was a disaster for New York Mets' beleaguered pitching staff and a boon for some former Mets. While Los Angeles Dodgers were cuffing three Met hurlers for 15 hits enroute to a 13-5 defeat, ex-Met Nolan Ryan yielded one run in four innings in California's victory over the Cubs, ex-Met Tommy Moore combined with Bob Forsch to pitch a one-hitter as St. Louis Cardinals beat Boston Red Sox 3-0 and ex-Met star Gary Gentry limited a split Houston squad to two hits in four innings as Atlanta Braves defeated the Astros 5-1.

In other games, the rest of the Astros blanked Minnesota Twins 3-0, Cincinnati Reds defeated Detroit Tigers 5-3, Philadelphia Phillies edged Pittsburgh Pirates 4-3 in 10 innings, Oakland A's beat San Diego Padres 4-2, a split Kansas City squad beat New York Yankees 8-4 while the rest of the Royals blanked Chicago White Sox 3-0, Montreal Expos nipped Texas Rangers 6-5 and San Francisco Giants defeated Milwaukee Brewers 4-1.

WIN COULD BE TICKET TO RUGBY TRIP SOUTH

University of Victoria Vikings can bring a South American tour closer to reality Sunday if they can win the Northwest Intercollegiate Rugby Conference championship by beating UBC Thunderbirds at Centennial Stadium.

Vikings need the Northwest title to present a convincing case for financial assistance from the provincial government for their tour this summer.

UBC, this season's McKechnie Cup champions, and UVic are unbeaten and untied in Northwest Conference play. Game time is 2:30 p.m. UVic Norsemen and UBC Braves, both 4-0, meet in a 1 p.m. exhibition.

Donna and Stu Win Super Tests

Defending champion Stu Garland and Vikette basketball player Donna Blackstock both survived close races to win the men's and women's titles in the second annual UVic superstars competition Friday.

Garland completed the 10 events with 33 1-3 points, winning the cycling race and tying for first in the balance contest, to finish ahead of Lou Purnell, who had 33 points. A five-second penalty in the obstacle race cost Viking basketballer Dale McDonald the men's title. He finished with 31 points, winning the baseball hitting and swimming titles.

Miss Blackstock won the baseball hitting and weightlifting events and finished with 42 points, one more than Roxanna McKenzie and Sally Sullivan.

Prairie Rinks Tied for Lead In Firefighters

WINNIPEG (CP) — Saskatchewan and Alberta were the only two rinks to survive unscathed after two draws in the Canadian firefighters' curling championship Friday.

The Alberta foursome, headed by Don Nelson, edged Manitoba's Harold Purpur, 10-9, in the opening round, then overpowered Frank Johnson of Nova Scotia, 10-2, in the evening.

Harvey Uhryniw of Saskatchewan defeated Johnson, 6-4 in the afternoon draw, and downed Lloyd Wood of Northwest Territories, 8-6, in the evening.

B.C.'s Wayne Adams dropped an 11-6 decision to Quebec in the opening round but rebounded for a 12-10 win over Northern Ontario and were in a five-way tie for third.

'GUILTY' MD FREED IN MERCY KILLING

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (UPI) — South Africa's first doctor to face a charge of mercy killing walked from the court a free man today although the judge found him guilty of the murder of his father, a terminal cancer patient.

Dr. Alby Hartman, 50, who denied the murder charge, had wept frequently in the supreme court during his three-day trial for giving an overdose of drugs to his dying, 87-year-old father.

Justice A. V. Winsen imposed a jail sentence "until the rising of the court" and a year's suspended imprisonment. The sentence meant Hartman left the court free. His smiling, Australian-born wife, Jan, was on his arm.

Hartman's father died last September 11 at Ceres Hospital in Cape province after an overdose of morphine and sodium pentathol which a nurse refused to administer until the doctor signed the patient's medical sheet.

Next morning nurse Patricia Machill reported the incident to the police. In court she said Hartman broke down when he returned from his father's hospital room to report his death.

The judge said Hartman's confession clearly proved an act of killing, but he said there were mitigating circumstances.

One Shot Good for Day

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Jay Percy Zachary is 103 and he says it doesn't make sense to worry about dying.

"I think about living," said Zachary as he celebrated his birthday Wednesday.

Zachary lives alone and cares for himself and his home. His days start at 5:30 a.m.

"The first thing I do is pour myself a good shot of whisky — 100 proof — and that gets me perked up," he told visitors. "I don't like drunks and drink nothing more than that first shot."

WORK FOR WEEK

The area of ground wanted for sowing vegetable seeds next month should be cultivated on surface whenever workable, to allow air penetration for warming and drying a little.

When planting fruit bushes and canes, be sure to pour water into planting holes before filling with soil, to drive out air. roots must be in close contact with soil before they will make new growth.

Roots of ranunculi and tubers of anemones planted now wither in sunny borders or in balcony tubs and planters will grow into lovely long-flowering plants during early summer. The soil must be filled with humus to hold moisture during dry weather yet drained of surplus moisture from now until rains cease.

Sow sweet pea seeds in small peat pots at 7 deg. C. (45F); pinch out center tip after four leaves are expanded.

Take cuttings of garden chrysanthemums, using basal shoots just showing. Root indoors in sand-peat mix, then into compost. Keep in cold-frame after rooting until planting out in late April.

'No Digging' Arguments Divide Gardeners

GARDENING
jack beastall

Mild interest is again evident in the "no-digging" method of gardening. Motives are mixed, some gardeners being seriously concerned with the preservation of our diminishing acres of arable land, others interested only in obtaining something worthwhile with the minimum of effort.

The no-digging theory has been expounded since the advent of the mould-board plow but was not widely known to home gardeners until a book was published on the subject around 1950.

The author, unable to perform the functions of digging due to surgery, wrote this detailed account of successes over several years without resort to spade or fork.

His arguments supporting the damage to soil by constant inversion were sound, and his carefully recorded results were convincing enough to start any skeptic (even me) on a series of experiments.

Gardening magazines were soon publishing articles pro and con. Fervor increased, but claims bordering on the impossible soon earned for the advocates the derogative title of "the no-digging cult".

This was unfortunate because the soundly based theories were quickly ridiculed without thorough testing under the dozens of variables to which gardens are subject. Had further experimentation been encouraged, we could reasonably have developed an entirely different approach to soil management during the past quarter century.

To fully comprehend the undesirable effects of inverting soil one has to study books on soil, what it is, how it is made, and recognize the difference between a "living" soil which supports balanced populations of micro-organisms, and a "dead" soil in which such populations cannot thrive.

There is no space here for technical discussion. For our purpose it is sufficient to indicate that some of these organisms depend on a certain amount of air for survival, while others are destroyed immediately on contact with air.

In a garden soil, those needing air (aerobic) exist near the surface, and the anaerobic (non-air) remains always at lower levels where air does not penetrate.

Hailed as one of man's greatest inventions, the mould-board plow was designed to invert the soil, the theory being that top-soil "improved" by the action of sun and air should be placed where roots are to grow, and the more stagnant lower soil brought to the surface for revitalizing.

Until the invention of the mould-board, soil had been loosened, not inverted, with a tree bough which led to the beam-plow. The loosening action of these implements left sufficient micro-organisms at the proper depths for continued multiplication.

Inversion of the soil, as many authorities stated, would smother the aerobic organisms and expose the anaerobic to air, thus rendering the soil virtually "dead" until the few survivors could increase and again become balanced. Meanwhile, young crops would suffer.

The first no-digging groups were formed to prevent extensive use of the mould-board plow. Methods have been modified over the years, the modern approach calling for a layer of compost or aged manure spread over the soil surface each spring, into which seeds are sown and plants are set without disturbance of the soil beneath.

This is the method followed in my experiments on a clay soil which had been heavily composted for 5 years and brought to the texture of a clay-loam. Such a soil is common to most areas of southern Vancouver Island.

The one problem with these soils is the damage to the surface caused by pounding winter rains which results in a hard crust being formed when the surface dries.

In an attempt to prevent this, the compost was applied in late September to provide a protective covering against winter rains, and it served this purpose well. But two other problems appeared.

Root crops such as carrots would fork as soon as they reached the clay surface, and top crops of the spinach-lettuce-cabbage group spread their roots sideways into the compost instead of into the soil, and were damaged as the sun became stronger and air temperatures increased. The roots definitely preferred the loose warm compost to the cool clay beneath.

To encourage deeper root penetration, the soil was loosened with a digging fork, but it was soon obvious that considerably more humus would be needed in the under-soil before the desired effects could be achieved.

A more careful perusal of the book revealed an important point that had been overlooked. The author's garden was part of a farm field that had been cultivated and heavily manured for 250 years.

In contrast, the soil I was working had been producing second growth timber trees less than 30 years prior to the experiment. Obviously, a piece of soil double-trenched, composted and manured by several generations of gardeners would have given different results.

Gardeners thinking of using no-digging methods, regardless of motivation, have some facts to face before success attends their efforts.

The local clay soils must first be converted to a finer textured loam by regular incorporation of really old cow manure mixed with the bedding material, or with quantities of compost.

Improved drainage of the natural clay is necessary. Clay soils are cold because of the quantity of moisture they retain. This low temperature plus the insulating effect of the layer of compost prevents the soil accumulating sufficient heat to encourage root penetration.

Elk Lake Garden Centre

Drainage in any clay can be improved by digging at least two spades deep, then loosening the sub-soil and holding it open with rough compost and twiggy material such as pussy-willow.

Finer compost must then be thoroughly incorporated with the two upper layers of soil as well as the surface mulch. This surface layer would be better applied to the surface in late September after the comparatively dry surface has been well loosened with a spading-fork. This will have to be continued for several years before anything near a loamy texture is apparent.

Regardless of being interested, or not interested, in the no-digging method of gardening, it should be obvious that any gardener making even a small attempt at improving his soil in this way will reap benefits well worth the effort. It should also be obvious that no-digging as a means of evading work is wishful thinking until our soils have had more generations of careful and thorough cultivation.

LEWD CHOPIN LETTERS PROVEN FORGERIES

By TREVOR WOOD

WARSAW (Reuter) — Letters purporting to show Polish composer Frederic Chopin as lewd and vulgar have been declared forgeries after intensive study by police criminologists.

The letters, of which only photocopies are known to exist, have caused controversy in music circles since they surfaced about 10 years ago.

If found authentic, the material in Chopin's letters would entail a complete reappraisal of the character of Poland's greatest musician.

"Chopin was very elegant, very careful about his person," said Helena Wroblewska, an expert on the composer's life. "Where he expressed himself on the subject of womn he was sometimes witty and jovial but never vulgar."

ADDRESSED TO COUNTESS

Chopin was purported to have written the letters to Delfina Potocka, the divorced wife of a Polish count, about 1835. She was a beautiful and talented musician whom Chopin knew well.

His references to her in other letters know nto be authentic were friendly, with no hint of the obsessions shown in the disputed letters.

Adam Harasowski, a Pole living in London, is said to have found some of the letters in 1963 among the papers of the late Polish composer Adam Szeligowski, who had not, however, mentioned their existence during his lifetime.

Szeligowski's widow also gave copies to British Chopinologist Arthur Hedley.

Before that, at the end of the Second World War, Paulina Czernicka, in Poland, first claimed to have the letters. These have not come to light but the Chopin Institute here has a ledger found among her papers in which she copied fragments of what appeared to be the controversial letters.

The first opportunity to examine the handwriting came when some of the nine known letters appeared in a London music magazine two years ago.

HANDWRITING CONFIRMED

The defence of their authenticity was led by Prof. Mateusz Glinski, a lawyer and musicologist of Detroit, whose arguments appeared to be confirmed by a declaration by a handwriting expert.

This caused a furore among admirers of Chopin and the full scientific apparatus of Poland's police headquarters was brought in to settle the argument.

The conclusion was that the photocopies had been assembled by cutting and pasting together words from Chopin's letters to his family and friends.

The identity of the forger or his motives was left to anyone's guess.

"Some people abroad may think we in Poland want to maintain the image of Chopin as it is known," said Mrs. Wroblewska, head of the Chopin Institute Museum.

"You can be sure that if the original letters existed, we would have a careful look at them.

"But we have no hope the originals will ever be found and only the originals can end this feud definitively."

IF YOU'RE PLANNING A EUROPEAN VACATION, CP AIR'S 22/45 DAY EXCURSION AIRFARES CAN MAKE IT EASIER FOR YOU.
AND MAYBE EVEN SAVE YOU MONEY.

Why easier?

With our 22/45 day excursion fares you don't have to reserve months ahead. Which helps. Especially if you're not exactly sure now, when you'd like to leave.

There's no need to put down a deposit either. Or pay for your ticket months in advance. Which also helps. Particularly if you might need the money for something else in the meantime.

The fact is, you can reserve and fly when you want. Even now. And pay later.

Now, how can our 22/45 day excursion fares save you money? Several ways.

Should your plans change, even at the last minute, you can cancel. Without a problem. Without losing any money.

Also, these low-cost fares are available all year 'round. And right now, before the Summer Travel Season (which begins June 1st) they cost even less.

There is a nice discount for your children too. 50% off the regular airfare for each child from 2 through 11 years of age.

So come. We'll whisk you over the shorter Polar Route to Amsterdam, where we can arrange convenient connecting flights for you to many other cities in Europe.

And you can also return home from the European city of your choice.

Call your travel agent. Or CP Air.

Summer Season Service.

Daily CP Air service from Vancouver to Amsterdam including a Wednesday nonstop, begins April 27. Or you can choose from several beautiful flights each week right now.

Sample scenery, Mai Tais leisurely on garden island

By DONALD H. HARRISON

LIHUE, Hawaii (CNS) — After awhile even a first-time visitor to these islands grows tired of that Pacific version of Miami Beach known as Waikiki.

The other islands beckon.

You can fly to this, the main town of Kauai, pronounced ka-why-ee, in just 20 minutes from Honolulu.

Two airlines make the shuttle, Aloha Air Lines and Hawaiian Air Lines. The flights are practically the same and rarely on time.

Kauai is called the "Garden Island" because of its lush vegetation.

Niihau is something of a Polynesian reserve where some 300 pure-blooded Hawaiians live much in the ways of their ancestors. There are no roads, television or other accoutrements of modern life. To get there you have to be invited, and unless you go there you won't meet anyone to invite you.

On Kauai, however, you and your money are most welcome.

Though much of the island can be seen in a single day, it is not advisable. It should be seen leisurely; its awesome scenery and inspiring Mai Tais sampled intermittently.

No one gave me such advice, however, and barely was I off the plane than I was on a sight-seeing bus that groaned through scores of curves leading to the Waimea Canyon lookout site.

The bus stopped at the privately owned Ona Pua Gardens where after being shown flowers and plants of nearly every hue and variety, we were invited to sample some starfruit, named for its shape.

On one particular curve, the bus stalled and to our dismay began rolling backward. After a few minutes of suspense, the driver got the bus started again and we were on our way.

"Don't worry," he said, "I've been able to complete this tour nine out of 10 times."

The grand finale — the Waimea Canyon — I'm afraid was a disappointment. Garden islands get that way because it rains a lot, and as our bus pulled up to the lookout site, the wind whipped the coldest, clammiest rain I have ever experienced.

We all galloped out of the bus, took an obligatory look over the canyon, saw nothing but rain blowing in our face, and got back into the bus.

I held a camera over my head, hoping it would see something I hadn't. It didn't.

In fairness, though, it doesn't always rain, and the Waimea Canyon is Hawaii's equivalent to the Grand Canyon of Arizona. I've seen other people's photographs of the lush canyon here and if the weather is right, it's well worth the visit.

The ride back was a lot easier, and we arrived in time to connect with a covered barge that would take us three miles up the Wailua River to the Fern Grotto.

The rain had subsided to a not unpleasant drizzle when we arrived at a landing that was but a short, slippery walk to the Fern Grotto.

You find yourself at the mouth of a huge cave, cathedral-like in its enormity. From the lava rock grow ferns which gravity got the better of, so they appear to be hanging upside down.

It is a place where ancient Hawaiians were married, our guide tells us in professional reverence.

That is the prelude to their rendition of the Hawaiian Wedding Song, which normally you're tired of already, but which somehow seems appropriate to this eerie place with its caverns, its echoes and its upside-down ferns.

Rail tours reasonable in Britain

Taking advantage of British Rail's high speed trains, these extremely low-priced tours give the visiting Canadian a quick trip to a town outside London, with an early a.m. departure from the capital city.

After a leisurely day of visiting towns and stately homes from a special chartered luxury coach, there's another fast train trip back to London and a night at your own hotel. A typical four is price $23 including lunch and "King Arthur's England" all entrance fees. Tour train leaves Paddington Station at 8:30 a.m. every Tuesday and Thursday for Glastonbury. There's a check-in point and uniformed hostess at the station.

The specially trained guide sorts out King Arthur fact from fiction during the train journey. Visits are included to Glastonbury Abbey where King Arthur is buried, the Vale of Avalon, the Chalice Well and other Arthurian associations. After lunch, Wells and the glorious 18th century city of Bath. The train arrives back in Paddington Station at 6:26 p.m. in time for any planned evening activities. For further details contact BritRail Travel International at 409 Granville Street, Vancouver, B.C. V6C 1T2.

Other tours include Canterbury and Dover $20; Stratford upon Avon, Warwick Castle and Coventry Cathedral $20.50; York and Harewood House $29; Oxford and the Cotswolds $19.70; Brighton and Arundel Castle $21, and Cambridge and the Suffolk Villages $19.20.

SPAIN'S EXTREMITIES BARGAIN

History's legacies to modern resorts

By KIMMIS HENDRICK

BARCELONA, Spain (CSM) — Spain's extremeties are a tourist's opportunities. Galicia to the northwest, Catalonia to the east — both offer everything from history's legacies to modern resorts, with art, scenery, and picturesque campsites included.

Add the fact that a first-class double room with bath often costs under $10, and you have one of the outstanding tourist temptations of Europe.

Santiago de Campostela, in Galician Spain, magnificently sums up the Middle Ages in a modern setting. So, in a different way, does Gerona, located about two hours north of here in Catalonia. As for the Costa Brava, the seaside stretching between here and France, many (including myself) think its star is Tossa de Mar.

You can easily reach these regions by train or car.

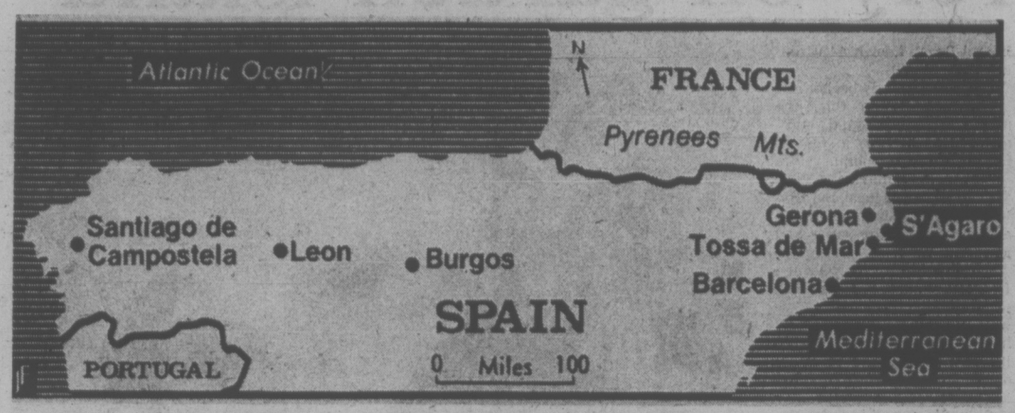
Leaving Paris by Trans-European Express's swift train called "L'Etandard," you get to the Spanish border early in the afternoon. Changing trains, you can get to Burgos that night, have the following morning to see that its Flemish recollections and its memorial to the Cid, and then be on your way to Santiago.

Or, taking the TEE from Geneva to Barcelona (the train is called the "Catalan-Talgo") you'll reach Gerona about 7 p.m. You won't have to change trains at the border. This one glides slowly onto Spain's wide-gauged tracks between French Cerbere and Spanish Port Bou.

Across from Gerona's railway station, the new Hotel Inmortel offers first-class double room with bath for about $9. Here's a clue to the prices you'll pay in Spain.

Sometimes they're even lower. At Burgos, the Londre y Norte, old but comfortable, charges about half as much. In Santiago, at the Hostal de los Reyes Catalicos, perhaps the most luxurious of Spain's national luxury hotels (or city's splendid cathedral with maybe it's the San Marcos Hostal at Leon), you won't pay much more than at Gerona. But meals may cost as much as the room.

Santiago's fame grows out of the Middle Ages when it ranked with Jerusalem and Rome as one of the three greatest goals of Christian pilgrimage. The cathedral is as readable as a history book.



The centuries shine through it. As much can be said of the Hostal, also, which was built for pilgrims by Isabel and Ferdinand and has been adapted in our time, by the Spanish government, to modern tourist needs.

The train trip from Burgos to Santiago, after leaving Leon (another treasure city, if you have the time) winds through country that will remind Americans of scenic Colorado. The highway is slow for driving, but the scenery is beautiful. One useful guide to exploring this fascinating region is the final chapter of James A. Michener's "Iberia," available in paperback and hardcover.

Gerona, in the East, is worth seeing for itself — a fine, prosperous city with Roman, Moorish, and Gothic monuments. The treasury of the cathedral is outstanding. From Gerona, buses take travelers to Tossa and other Costa Brava resorts. (They can also be reached by bus from Barcelona. The train takes a roundabout route and is not recommended. Highways, again, are good.)

Tossa, an ancient coastal port, is backed by tree-covered hills and rimmed by sky-blue bay. Its battlements are beautiful, its beaches excellent for sunning and swimming. Its narrow streets wind between white-washed houses with flower-decked balconies; its shops display merchandise often worth considering for souvenirs.

Swiss and Dutch vacationers favor its hotels, which means they're keyed to good food and service. A pleasant small hotel, the Neptune, gives a double room with bath, balcony, and three agreeable meals for about $16 a day for two. Other hotels charge about the same.

Among expensive hotels, many Americans enjoy the Hotel de la Gavina at S'Agro, a charming resort slightly beyond Tossa. The resorts nearer Barcelona are famed mostly for their beaches and attract huge crowds of north Europeans, eager for Spain's sun.

Spain's Tourist Information Agency at Fernando Agullo 3 in Gerona can furnish details on the Costa Brava, as can its offices in Barcelona and elsewhere. But for background reading, see the opening chapters of Rose Macauley's Fabled Shore, an entrancing book, and such advice as may be found in Fodor's guide to Spain and other handbooks.

Atmosphere, comfort in German castles

German castle hotels are offering reasonably priced packages and tours for individual travellers proving that a stay at a castle hotel need not be expensive.

The Association of Hotels in German Castles, Stately Mansions and Historic Inns (Gast im Schloss) which has 54 members, has issued a program of packages under the slogan "Romanticism and Comfort." Fly-and-drive programs are available for 1975. A five-day tour with overnights and half board in four castle-hotels in North Germany is offered for DM342 (about $142.00).

An eight-day gourmet food trip will be organized in the Sauerland and Weserbergland.

A 15-day tour of German castle hotels and stately mansions on the Rhine, in Franconia, Waldeck and the Sauerland features German specialities and wines and includes 14 nights, half board and three festive dinners for DM 868 (about $360.00). Unusual offers are the "knightly meal" served at Burg Guttenberg, a "wood-cutter's fondue" at Schloss Weitenburg, a roast on the spit at Burg Hornberg.

Safari highlights Brazil and Africa

An opportunity to experience the excitement of photographing animals in their natural environment is offered in a fascinating 20-day Wing Safari over South West Africa and Botswana.

The special vacation package developed by Lindblad Travel in co-operation with Varig Brazilian Airlines takes safari members to the colorful resort city of Rio de Janeigo; into South West Africa; Botswana, where man's existence on earth can be traced back half-a-million years; Victoria Falls in Rhodesia and to some of the most famous game reserves in Africa.

Highlights of the safari include countless opportunites to photograph wild game and bird life in their natural surroundings, thrilling flights in bush aircraft over rarely seen regions of the African Veldt, exciting Land Rover excursions among herds of zebra, buffalo and wildebeest, and a visit to the world's oldest desert.

White Jews of Cochin fascinating

Cochin's impressive synagogue

COCHIN, India — Religion has always played a large role in the life of India's people.

Practically all the country's monuments, temples and other historic sites — which attract nearly one-half million visitors per year — were built with regard to religious beliefs.

When visitors think in terms of religion in India, exotic sounding names such as Hinduism, Buddhism, Islam and Sikhism come to mind. And well they should, because these and other eastern beliefs obviously predominate.

However, Cochin, located in India's Kerala State, holds a startling surprise for the average visitor. For located here is one of the most impressive Jewish synagogues in the world, and a small community of people known as the white Jews of Cochin.

The first emigration of Jews to Kerala is reputed to have occurred in 6 BC, although a much larger movement took place in 1 AD as the Jews fled Roman persecution in Jerusalem. This group settled in Cranganore, near Cochin, where they stayed until the city was destroyed by the Portuguese in the 15th century.

The synagogue was built in 1568 in Cochin's Mattancheri Town, where today's Jews still reside. One of the most impressive sights in the synagogue are the copper plates presented to the Jewish community by King Bhaskara Ravi Varma in 4 AD. On these plates was writing awarding the Jews the village of Anjuvannam, meaning five castes — as the Jews were believed to be the lords of five castes of artisans. The plates stated that "Anjuvannam shall be the hereditary possession of Joseph Rabban and his descendents so long as the world and moon exist."

The king was a man of his word, with the Jewish community flourishing and serving as a haven for Jews from the Middle East and Europe.

Then came the Portuguese under Albuquerque, who requested permission from the King of Portugal to exterminate the Jews one by one, destroying Cranganore. Also during this period, the Moslems started giving the Jews trouble, and it wasn't until the Dutch arrived that the Jews of Cochin were able to live without fear of death once more.

The synagogue in Mattancheri was embellished considerably in the mid-18th century by Ezekiel Rahabi, who constructed a clock tower and paved the floor with hand-painted tiles of willow pattern, each one different. They were brought in all the way from China.

Today, however, the congregation has diminished in size. There are only a few hundred of the pale, blond White Jews of Chochin left. Many of them emigrated to Holland and England, although only a few have gone back to Israel. Most of the remaining Jews now reside on one street called Jew Town, in Mattancheri. However, they remain a fascinating facet of Cochin's life.

In addition to its Jewish community, Cochin offers a number of other attractions for the visitor. The city is one of the three biggest ports on the west coast of India, and the largest in Kerale State, handling close to two million tons of cargo per year. It is also a centre for the coir industry, but hardly has the appearance of an industrial city. Cochin has a setting of shady lagoons, wooded islands and canals winding past houses on stilts. It has been dubbed variously as Venice of the East or Queen of the Arabian Sea — whichever happens to catch your fancy. The city has always displayed a varied blend of peoples and architecture which is well worth a visit. There are Jewish synagogues, Portuguese churches, Dutch architecture, mosques, Hindu temples and the ever eye appealing Chinese fishing nets — a unique way of commercially catching fish. These nets can be seen via backwater boat tours of the area surrounding Cochin.

Cochin is actually the name for a cluster of islands and towns. On the mainland, some three miles from the harbor of Cochin (the two are linked by bridges) is Ernakulam, once the capital of the former state of Cochin. The backwaters around this area form an especially attractive and economically valuable feature of this section of Kerala State.

A backwater trip provides glimpses of the aforementioned Chinese fishing nets, plus an intimate look into the lives of the people living here. Also visible are a multitude of palm trees (Kerala means land and palms), giving one the feeling of being in the heart of the tropics.

The residential quarter of Fort Cochin provides a glimpse of old England, tropical style. An English village green, tudor houses, lawns, a club and other similarities could fool the visitor—except for those palm trees. Bolghatty Island is the home of a tourist bungalow which was a former colonial mansion used by the Dutch governor and later by the British Resident.

Fort Cochin is believed to be the oldest European settlement in India. The Portuguese first arrived in 1500, followed by Albuquerque a few years later. He brought five friars with him, and then proceeded to build the first European church in India in 1510. It still stands in Cochin as St. Francis Church.

Vasco da Gama, the world famous explorer, called at Cochin for the first time in 1502 and later returned in 1524 as Portuguese Viceroy of the Indies. He died in Cochin, and was buried in St. Francis Church. His gravestone is still there for visitors to see, although his remains were taken back to Portugal in 1538.

Park popular

Two years after the Olympic Summer Games, 1972, Munich's Olympia Park with its extensive sports and recreation facilities has become one of the foremost tourist attractions of the Bavarian Capital. Since September 12, 1972, the day after the closing ceremony, 10.6 million people from all over the world have visited the Olympic Site.

King Hassan Trying Hard

By DAVID HIRST
Manchester Guardian

"Very few kings have fallen through the fault of others. Most of them have fallen through their own fault." One gathers, from his reflections on the downfall of Haille Selassie, that King Hassan considers himself a worthy incumbent of Africa's last great monarchy.

It is certainly true that this miraculous survivalist, if ever there was one, is trying very hard to make sure that these impeccably unassuming, democratic sentiments do not become his own epitaph. And he is doing better than many people, not so long ago would have thought possible.

It is only three years since in the first of two abortive coups, officer-cadets massacred 98 guests at a royal garden-party in Skirat, and two years since, in the second, General Oufkir, Hassan's all-powerful police chief, unsuccessfully conspired with air force pilots to shoot down the royal Boeing with all aboard.

The regime has uncovered more "plots" since: nevertheless, wrote a Moroccan exile recently, it appears that the Morocco which made the headlines in recent years, the "Shakespearean" or "Florentine" Morocco, is yielding to a more civilized and constructive one.

It is not through democratising his regime that the King is consolidating it — not yet at least. One all-too-conspicuous means has been the overhaul and expansion, with American and French assistance, of his security services, to which, anxious to avoid the rise of another Oufkir, he has applied the principle of divine rule. Parallel authorities spy on each other — but all, he hopes, for him.

The powers of the king, almost absolute under the constitution, have been the chief issue of Moroccan politics since independence — and the real underlying cause, his critics contend, of those episodes of medieval treachery and barbarism that erupt from time to time against him.

"We do not expect a Westminster democracy," Abdul Rahman Bouabid, head of the Urtion Nationale des Forces Populaires told me, "but we do expect the king to start turning himself into a constitutional monarch in tune with our time and place."

It was when, early this year, the king received Bouabid, one of the principal "Opposition" leaders, that hopes dawned of a new relationship between the palace and "the parties" — that loose and often quarrelsome assortment of political groupings, conservative, liberal, and socialist, who challenge the king's right to rule, in this day and age, in the autocratic manner of his ancestors.

The regime's friends are right in claiming that there is rather more freedom of expression in Morocco than in most other Arab countries — though that is not saying much — but it seems to coexist with habits of violence surpassed only by that traditionally violent country at the other end of the Arab world, Iraq.

The king, says Bouabid, claims to make a distinction between opinion and subversion, but he does not even stick to the rules of his own, harsh legality. Asked about the workings of Moroccan justice, which can be liberal one day and extremely vindictive the next, Bouabid's only answer is a gesture of resigned incomprehension — and a reminder that hundreds of his party militants are still in prison without trial.

The king will not democratize himself, the Opposition says, because he loves power too much.

What the king certainly is doing is to borrow the Opposition's policies without so far ceding them any power — or at least to keep the democratic opening credible, no more than a tantalizing glimpse of it.

There is no doubt that, through the significant contribution his country now makes to the Palestine cause, Hassan has won widespread popular approval. The Moroccans' very distance from Palestine makes their efotional involvement more authentic and uncomplicated than that of many Arabs closer to it. In 1967, Moroccan troops never reached the front.

With much fanfare, and a ceremonial leave - taking in Rabat, Hassan dispatched some 3,000 troops to Syria some six months before the outbreak of the next Arab-Israeli war and after it began, some 3,000 more to Egypt where — Sadat disclosed last week — they participated in the final defence of Suze Town.

Chinese Hospital a Blending of Two Cultures

By HOY-YIN DER
Times Staff

Gee Kwon is almost a century old, but he is as active as many men half his age.

The 96-year-old, classified as a mobile patient of the Chinese Hospital at 555 Herald Street, is permitted to galivant about the town whenever he wishes — which, according to a hospital official, has been every day since his arrival at the hospital last week.

"Monday last, while at The Bay buying a watch, my hernia dropped," Gee said.

"I tried to catch it and fell down . . . the ambulance took me to the white people's hospital, but I decided it was time to move to the Chinese hospital."

Gee has had a long and full life. If anyone is interested in hearing about work in the sawmills and coal mines at 10 cents an hour or the laying of the foundation of the Empress Hotel while standing in knee-deep mud, Gee is the person to see.

He is the oldest of 17 aged Chinese in the 21-bed hospital. The "youngest" is 75.

Hospital administrator Peter Wong said the hospital was founded in 1888 by the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association to care for elderly Chinese men, there being no such thing as social welfare at that time.

"And the reason it was established for men instead of women or both men and women, was that the need was not there," he said.

Wong explained that Canadian immigration laws up to the 1940s made it extremely difficult for Chinese men to bring their families with them to Canada.

Chinese women in Canada were a scarcity so the men would often return to China to marry, come back to Canada and send money home to support their families.

"Therefore, while each Chinese family generally takes care of its own elderly, most of the men who go the the Chinese hospital have no family in Canada."

Wong said during the hungry 30s the property was lost to the city by default in taxes. The Chinese association has continued to administer the hospital but while the institution was originally established as a general hospital, today it serves as a rest home.

"The city pays $410 each month for the room, board and nursing care of each welfare patient, although we do have a number of private patients also paying the same amount each month."

Wong said this is the hospital's sole source of income which must pay for heat, light, food, medication, and the salaries of seven orderlies and two cooks.

The cooks are Chinese and Chinese lunches and dinners are cooked for the patients. Breakfasts are western.

The consensus among the patients is that the Chinese hospital is preferable to a western hospital or rest home.

Having associated with Chinese people all their lives, the men say they prefer to die in the company of their own kind than in an institution totally alien to them. At the Chinese hospital, they can speak to each other in their own language, eat traditional oriental meals and read the Chinese newspapers which come twice a day.

But not only is the hospital a haven for elderly Chinese, it is also a classic example of communication between two different cultures — all orderlies are caucasian, all patients are Chinese.

"Most of the patients don't speak English but they know what we're saying, and even though we don't speak Chinese, we understand what they want," said head orderly Arthur Plint.

Plint, who has been at the hospital for more than eight years, says he wouldn't want to work anywhere else.

"They thank you for everything and are really wonderful to work with," said Plint, who the patients have nicknamed "Georgie" because they find it difficult to say Art.

Jung Wah, 86, who has been at the hospital for two years, recently had a throat operation and it hurts him to talk. Yet he made a great effort to indicate he was being treated well at the hospital.

GEE KWON
. . . receives eyedrops

Pointing to an orderly, he said, "Mr. New Man . . . friend," referring to Bob Bennett who has been working at the hospital for two months.

Ninety-three-old Yong Jam Yaw said he is content.

"Here I have food to eat, a bed to sleep in and friends to talk to and to wait together for the next life."

But not all the patients simply eat, sleep and await death.

There is Lee Pung Pin, 83, who has been going to Chinatown twice every week since his arrival at the hospital six years ago. And the purpose for these bi-weekly escapades? — to play mah-jong.

25 Years of Aiding Stricken

elizabeth forbes

Nineteen concerned Victoria women gathered in the home of Miss Kay Exham on April 11, 1949, to form a Multiple Sclerosis Society dedicated to helping those stricken with that nervous system disease.

Today, 25 years later, the society, now enlarged many times and with many on-going programs, is marking the silver anniversary with a special annual meeting in the Empress Hotel.

Volunteers and members who were active in the formative years are attending, or have sent messages to this meeting.

Mrs. Evelyn Lamont is here from her home in Langley. Miss Exham, the first secretary-treasurer, and now a patient in Shaughnessy Hospital, has sent greetings and a cheque.

Archie Wills, an early president and now a director, who has had much to do with expansion and fund raising, is a special guest.

Reminiscing with Mr. Wills a day or so ago, I learned Mrs. M. Jennings, who gathered the 19 people together for that first meeting, and herself a sufferer from MS, was the first president.

Two years later, in 1951, Lloyd Morgan, a former city alderman, stricken with the illness, associated himself with the society and its work.

About the same time Mrs. Lamont, who had come to this city in 1947, from Flin Flon, Manitoba, joined the organization and rapidly became one of its most active leaders.

Dedicated workers included Dr. Marian Sherman, Col. Longridge, Mrs. Alsdorf, Miss Bess McGillvray, Mrs. E. Wardley-Smith, Mr. and Mrs. A. Millard, Mrs. Lorna Millard and Gordon Jennings.

Hon. Charles Banks, then Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, was patron. Professional advice was given by Drs. Charles Simpson and Robert M. Peet.

Other names that came to Mr. Wills' mind were Mrs. Denis Metcalfe, Mrs. Dobie, Judy Hope, Edie Leech, Margaret Scoby, Lil Bridgman, Susie Wood, Dolly Hicks, Annette Knox and Lydia Wills.

In 1951 a silver tea raised a sum of $77 and total receipts for that year were $232.67.

"So you can see, as with all new organizations, money was needed, but it was hard to come by," Wills says.

Just about then a request came from the national MS society for $2,500, quota it had set for Victoria.

Wills remembers the sum looked to be right out of reach. Nevertheless, he stood up and moved that "we accept the quota with pleasure."

That seemed to be the necessary challenge, he says now, "the group got into stride and to the surprise of us all, we made it."

Soon after, the local society decided to bow out of national society research for a time and to concentrate on developing its own patient-aid program, for which it is widely noted today.

"We had exchanged much correspondence with London and Washington and knew of their extensive research programs; we also had good counsel from Dr. Bourdillion of Salt Spring Island, who had much experience with MS in Britain . . . and we believed our funds could safely be diverted to patient care."

The society conducted its own drives for funds until 1959 when it received and accepted an invitation to join the Community Chest.

"It's been a happy partnership," Wills says, "and, this year, much of our budget of $102,000 is being met through a Chest grant."

Around 1960, the League of the Handicapped, formed by Fred Blakeney, became a part of the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

An auxiliary was formed under the name of Golden Key, the symbol of the society "because some day soon we hope to unlock the mystery of MS."

In the years since that time this auxiliary has raised $25,000 through various events.

It was in the 1960s too, that patient-aid increased in scope.

"We started to provide housekeeper services, nursing in homes, enlarged social activities and to loan needed equipment to patients, with help of Sydney Pickles, who made many of the aids."

Another step ahead came when Mrs. Lamont obtained space in the Saanich Municipal Hall complex for a physio and occupational therapy clinic.

"Once the clinic was operating, transportation of patients became a problem," Wills remembers, "and it was then we found a stalwart backer in the Cosmopolitan Club . . . it raised the money for our first bus."

Second bus, with a lift, was donated by Mrs. Florence Fielding, when she heard of the need through a Cosmopolitan Club member.

It was Mrs. Fielding too, who left $100,000 in her will, for the Batten-Fielding complex now in course of development for the handicapped, next to the MS clinic on Vernon Avenue.

Wills also points out that the MS Society "pioneered the move to have a Goodwill Industries set up here to use the skills of handicapped persons." And to the fact that the Rotary Club "took over this program from us and has built it into a flourishing industry."

He also explained that the organization, re-incorporated now as the Victoria and Vancouver Island Multiple Sclerosis Society, "recently expanded its work to up-island centres, with a strong group in Nanaimo."

Recently too, local programs have been receiving recognition of the national group "with the result we have had delegates in attendance at their meetings . . . and this year, we donated $1,500 to their research program."

In conclusion Wills said that on this 25th anniversary of its founding, those who have worked so diligently for the Victoria society "feel a great sense of gratitude for what has been accomplished, for the generous support received from citizens in general and particularly for the many volunteers who have served—and never wavered—when we were confronted by lack of funds, growing pains and the never ending demands for more effort.

"It has been a very satisfying experience and we look forward, with confidence, to expanding our efforts even further and to bringing more and more aid to those suffering from MS . . . their number is increasing at the rate of between 30 and 40 each year."

Wills, one-time managing editor of this newspaper and an alderman of the City of Victoria in the years 1934-44, holds a certificate of merit from the national MS society for his dedicated work here.

Whole Wheat Bread Passes Taste Test

By MARY MOORE

For years I have been struggling to produce the perfect 100% whole wheat loaf of bread. After each test I have had some doubts.

As you may remember readers have been coaxing me to give them just such a recipe. One of our readers, Kathleen Bailey, has sent me her method and yesterday I tried it without one grain of white flour and it is perfectly satisfactory.

Two of us tasted it critically and decided that our serious bread makers would welcome it.

100% WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
(2 loaves; no white flour)

2 c. scalded milk
3 tbsp. sugar
2 tsp. salt
¼ c. shortening
½ c. lukewarm water
1 tbsp. (OR 1 envelope) granular yeast
1 tsp. sugar
About 6½ cups stirred whole wheat flour.
½ c. wheat germ
2 eggs.

To the scalded milk add the sugar, salt and shortening. Stir well and cool to lukewarm.

Into a large bowl measure the lukewarm water and sprinkle the yeast and 1 teaspoon sugar on top and let soak 10 minutes. Then add the lukewarm milk mixture and FOUR cups of the whole wheat flour and the wheat germ and beat for 10 minutes. Stir in 1½ cups whole wheat flour as well as you can. Scrape down sides of bowl, cover and let rise at room temperature 2 hours.

Stir down dough and turn out on kneading board sprinkled with 1 cup whole wheat flour and knead 200 times. Do not shorten this kneading time for you are developing the gluten of which there is a smaller proportion in whole wheat flour obviously. You will work in most of the flour on the board.

Cut dough in half. Roll each half out to a 15x8" oblong. Tightly roll each up like a jelly roll and place in greased standard loaf pans (9x5x2¼") and let rise 2½ hours under a lighted light bulb if possible.

Bake at 375 deg. Fahr. 35 minutes or until when lightly rapped on top with your knuckles it sounds hollow. Cool on racks.

Now slice off a crust, butter and take a bite. See how you bread experts like that! I'm converted. It makes wonderful toast.

NOTE: Write to Mary Moore, 32 Churchill Ave., Hamilton, Ont., enclosing stamped, self-addressed envelope and 10c for each specified recipe.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: My younger sister passed away last month and I found a yellowed clipping of your column in her Bible. Here it is:

"DEAR ABBY: Will you please remind your readers to look after their parents who are too old to look after themselves? Old parents need all their children. It's not always easy to cope with aging parents, but we weren't easy to cope with when they were raising US either. We OWE it to them. I just wish someone had reminded ME of these things when Mama was still alive. It's too late now, and I haven't had a decent night's sleep since she died three months ago.

I knew she had a good home with my sister, so that was that. Why didn't I take her for a few weeks, or even for Sunday dinner, or for a little drive? I never had time for her, yet I had time for others, and anything else I wanted to do. A change of scenery or even a meal at my home would have meant so much to her, but I was too busy. Oh, I had plenty of excuses.

I suppose the only one in our large family who is sleeping is my sister who took Mama to live with her. I've tried to ease my conscience by telling myself that I wasn't really ashamed of Mama like my brothers were. Or that I wasn't cheap, like another sister. I DID buy her things (which she never really needed or enjoyed much.) But it's too late now.. I hope Mama forgives me. Can't Sleep.

Abby, "Can't Sleep" was my sister. I'm the one Mama went to live with.

It's too late for me to tell my sister that Mama did forgive her. Mothers always do. But I hope you will print this again for those for whom it's not yet too late. The Oldest

DEAR OLDEST: Consider it done. It's always later than we think.

DEAR ABBY: Please don't think I'm some kind of nut, but I can't find the answer in any book and don't want to show my ignorance by asking someone I know. I'm a grown woman and probably should know the answer, but here goes:

Is it true that horses sleep standing up? Someone said they did, but I didn't know whether he was serious or not. Stupid Question.

DEAR QUESTION: First, no question is stupid if it's sincere. Second, all horses are able to "lock" their legs with very little muscle strain, which enables them to sleep standing up if they so desire. However not all horses sleep this way. Some prefer to lie down. (It's about fifty-fifty.) At least my animal expert has so informed me, and he got it straight from the horse's mouth.

DEAR ABBY: My husband's sister and her husband have done something to grievously hurt me.

They live a great distance from us, and I used to write to them faithfully every week. Now I have stopped writing because of what has happened, but my husband has now started to write to them regularly.

I think this is wrong of him. Don't you think that out of loyalty to me, my husband should take my part and be on my side? Hurt

DEAR HURT: Loyalty need not necessarily include taking on the enemies of one's spouse. You don't say what these people did to hurt you, but apparently your husband wasn't as grievously hurt by it as you were.

Alvarez-Welch Medical Report

By DR. WILLIAM J. WELCH

If it is okay to have a thermometer at home to take your temperature, why not a home blood-pressure cuff to take your blood pressure?

That's what some doctors are beginning to recommend because they say that the sporadic measurements they take in their offices do not give an accurate enough picture of what is going on.

With the newly awakened interest in pills that can lower the blood pressure if it is too high, there is an increasing need to have accurate daily records in order to be sure that the dose of antihypertensive medication is enough and not too much.

There is often a marked variation in the levels recorded in the doctor's office and those that in fact prevail at home and on the job. Thus, although many doctors shudder at the thought of millions of already uptight patients becoming wedded to their blood-pressure cuffs and neurotic over the numbers they record, others think the potential benefits are worth the risk.

They say that is only takes about 20 minutes to teach a patient how to use a conventional stethescope and a blood-pressure measuring device (sphygmomanometer), and if they cannot learn, somebody in the family or a next door neighbor can be recruited to do the job.

At the Hypertension Clinic of the University Medical Centre in Ann Arbor, Michigan, for the past 15 years, physicians have been writing our prescriptions for home blood-pressure machines just as they might for pills. They advise about 20 per cent of their patients to go on home blood-pressure determintions. These are, on the one hand, the very mildly hypertensive and, on the other hand, those with severe high blood pressure.

For the mildly hypertensive, home blood pressures are recorded for a short time, the aim being to establish the actual baseline pressure levels under the conditions of daily living. Once this is established, appropriate treatment is started and its effectiveness determined.

Those with chronic severely elevated blood pressure are expected to record their blood-pressure levels for the rest of their lives just as many diabetics check their urine for sugar every day so they can regulate their insulin dosage.

In much the same way, antihypertensive medication can be regulated in accordance with the degree to which the blood pressure responds or fails to respond to medication in the home environment.

Nobody thinks that self-measurement of blood pressure is not fraught with problems. For one thing, doctors know very well that patients vary widely in their willingness to take daily medicine for an ailment that for years may be entirely free of symptoms. Others are already anxious and frightened and only become more so if they are faced with keeping a score card with numbers on them, which they do not really understand.

But the enthusiasts for home measurement take the quite reasonable position that worrying about your blood pressure and keeping it on the low side is preferable to being struck down by a heart attack or a stroke.

SPY TRY FOILED

READING, England (Reuter) — Smooth-talking factory cleaner Philip Riley fooled a patriotic Roman Catholic priest into handing over 20,000 pounds, $48,000 by posing as a spy, a court here was told.

Riley, 29, who pleaded guilty to six charges of theft, deception and forgery, was jailed for two years Thursday after the prosecution said he.

—Invented a ministry of civil intelligence and made the priest an honorary lieutenant-colonel in it.

—Covered his body in bandages and told the priest he had been shot up in gun battles.

—Arriving at the door with his eye bandaged, told the priest it had been shot out and got money for a glass one.

—Sent telegrams of thanks to the priest signed Pooh Bear and talked of a faceless secret service boss called Dillon.

—Persuaded the priest to take his place in court on a speeding charge, because his appearance would endanger national security.

The prosecution said Father Garlick, who had a great admiration for the secret service, had given the money from his own pocket and did not want it back.

11 PxQP	Resigns (a)

(a) Seems rather early. True, he has lost a pawn, but Colle felt that that was too much of a handicap against the great Cuban.

Bobby Fischer resigned the world title last June, but there is still hope that he will change his mind and meet challenger Anatoly Karpov this year.

Fischer had set three new conditions to the FIDE (International Chess Federation) at its General Assembly meeting in Nice, France.

One: Instead of six wins, ten wins would decide the winner. Draws would not count. This was accepted by the FIDE.

Two: Instead of only playing 24 games, match games would go on until one player scored ten wins. This was half-way rejected by the FIDE. But they did go up to 36 games.

Three: The champion (Fischer) would retain his title if he scored nine points which, in effect, means that his challenger must score 10-8 to win the title. This was turned down by the FIDE, and Fischer announced that he was giving up his crown.

As this is written, both sides are holding the line on their decisions.

Manila has offered five million dollars for the match. Mexico City has offered $400,000; Milan, $450,000. Mexico has gone so far as to hire an advertising agency to start the ground work to promote the match.

If the conditions of play are settled, each player is to name the city he prefers for the match. Everyone is pretty sure which city Bobby will choose. It's Manila. He is on very good terms with the President of the Phillipines. The Russians will probably say Milan — if only to irritate Fischer!

In the meantime, there is a movement afoot to call a special meeting of FIDE's General Assembly to give both FIDE and Fischer a chance to compromise and have the match take place in June of 1975.

FIDE will probably give part way on the second of Fischer's conditions by going to 50 games instead of the 36, and Fischer may drop his third point. This would make everybody happy and chess would once again experience a great boom that would benefit all nations in th world. The winner will get ⅝ of the prize money; the loser, ⅜.

Fischer has not participated in any over-the-board tournament since June-August of 1972, when he beat Boris Spassky for the world crown in Reykjavik, Iceland. But he has not missed any important game played in the last three years! He has been receiving all magazines and tournament games, and has been studying all games with great care, He is still young enough to be able to withstand the physical strains of a world match, and I feel that once all points on the forthcoming world match are settled, Bobby will play one or two matches, most likely with Grandmaster Walter Browne of Berkeley or Henrique Mecking of Brazil.

By the end of this month the chess world should know whether Bobby will play or not. Five million dollars (the highest sum ever offered for chess — Ali move over!) is nothing to sneeze at. On the other hand, Bobby can be an extremely tough bargainer and it is perfectly possible that his resignation of the crown will stand.

My guess? I think (a) Bobby will play and (b) Bobby will win.

Chip Export Permitted

Pope and Talbot Ltd.'s request has been granted until July 31, 1975, according to a cabinet order released Friday.

The order says the company may export any surplus during periods when Canadian Cellulose Ltd.'s pulp mill is unable to use the company's full production of wood chips.

Premonitions Bureau Launched

VANCOUVER (CP) — A service is being set up here to help prove that premonitions really exist.

Psychic Studies Inc. (PSI) is starting a Premonitions Bureau to record feelings that something is going to happen.

Wayne Husband, secretary of PSI, said the service does not aim to do anything about premonitions but to confirm their existence. All forewarnings will be dated, witnessed proved true or false.

The Vancouver bureau will be linked with others in Toronto, London and New York.

Wagon Train Now 'Misadventure'

TORONTO (CP) — Gary Horan, 30, an organizer of the Canadian Wagon Train scheduled to depart to Alberta from Kleinburg, Ont., April 1, said Wednesday that the expedition "seems to have been a misadventure."

"The wagon train could have been one of the most significant things to happen in Canada this year, but some people have tried to manipulate it."

He would not elaborate.

The 2,900-mile trek, organized last fall, is supposed to end in Alberta's Peace River area where the participants hope to homestead.

Officials of the Alberta lands and forests said last month that the would-be pioneers fail to meet the province's residency requirement for homesteading.

The trek organizers say the travellers will stay on a friend's land for a year, if necessary, to meet the Alberta homesteading law which says a person must be a resident for 12 months.

The organizers say they do not know how many persons will make the trek in the horse-drawn covered wagons.

SOUL TRAVEL TOPIC

Advanced Eckankar initiate Helen Baird will speak in Victoria Tuesday on the ancient science of soul travel.

Baird and others from Eckankar headquarters in San Francisco are engaged in speaking tours reaching many of the science's two million followers in the world.

Followers in Victoria number about 100, said local Eckankar teacher Judy Kondratiuk, and the group has an office at 1012 Blanshard St.

Baird will speak at the University of Victoria March 25 in Elliott 108 at 8 p.m. and anyone interested is invited.

"Eckankar is a path to God through soul travel," said Kondratiuk.

It does not involve meditation, she said.

"Meditation was born in the East where life is slow. We do what we call contemplate, and the soul leaves the body and travels into the higher realms of consciousness."

Introductory lectures are given at the Blanshard centre every Wednesday at 8 p.m. and Saturday at 1:30 p.m.

Quaker Lecture

Quakers in Victoria will sponsor a lecture on the release of Vietnamese prisoners Sunday at 7:30 p.m.

Speaking on the subject will be Ann Buttrick, Toronto secretary of the International Committee to Free South Vietnamese Political Prisoners.

Buttrick will speak in the Friends' Meeting House, 1829 Fern St., and all concerned Victorians are welcome.

The speaker has travelled to both North and South Vietnam and watched the political situation there.

Group Tackles Loneliness

Volunteers to the Council of Churches Community Companions in Victoria will get some insights into loneliness at a workshop to be held March 25 from 2 to 4 p.m. at 941 Pandora St.

Loneliness Conquered is the title of the workshop, and speakers will be city residents who have worked with lonely people or had more experience with it than usual because of physical disability.

Council volunteers and others interested are invited.

Dictionary Breakthrough For Indians

FORT ST. JAMES, B.C. (CP) — Missionary scholar Dick Walker and fellow-linguist David Wilkinson, along with five Indian women, have published what they think is a potential breakthrough in the advancement of Indians.

It's a 400-page bilingual dictionary of English and Central Carrier, a member of the Athapaskan language family. Athapaskan languages are spoken in Alaska, the Yukon, the Northwest Territories, parts of Alberta and in north-central British Columbia.

Mr. Walker spent 12 years translating Central Carrier, a language that is so complicated it has 300 different ways to say the word "it."

"It blows your mind," he said.

With 3,500 entries and 50-page concordance, the dictionary is the first adequate translation of the complicated oral language to written form. Used in conjunction with school primers which have also been translated, it will give Indian children an even chance in public schools.

Mr. Walker said public schools have "locked up the minds" of Indians by not adapting to their language and culture.

International studies have shown that Indian children would learn English four times faster by first learning the structure of their native tongue, he continued.

"When English kids start school, their parents think of it as Mile 1, but in reality it is Mile 6 because these children have the advantage of an informal education in English language."

"The Indian's first six years of experience are totally ignored by schools. Grade 1 can be so terrifying the kids only learn they do not want to learn."

Four Carrier readers are in use at a Roman Catholic school in this community northwest of Prince George in central B.C. Kindergarten children learned to read and write Carrier after only 36 hours of classroom instruction. Mr. Walker said that by spring children in Grades 5 to 7 will be fluent readers of Carrier.

The next move will come if the Vanderhoof school district gets education department approval to introduce the program in all public schools.

To accomplish this, at least 250 Carrier books would have to be prepared and a special school set up to train Indian teachers. White teachers would not be considered because self-sufficiency is an important aspect of the project.

Mr. Walker and Mr. Wilkinson are members of a unique international body of Christian missionary scholars called the Summer Institute of Linguistics. Both men said they are non-denominational and identify themselves simply as Christians.

Tapes Bear Tidings

Faith comes by hearing the Word of God, says the cassette catalogue at Glad Tidings Pentecostal Church.

The 19-page catalogue lists over 900 titles in the church's cassette collection which has been established and growing for three years.

Both international and local evangelists are recorded on subjects as diverse as The Difference between Spiritual and Carnal and Studies in Galatians.

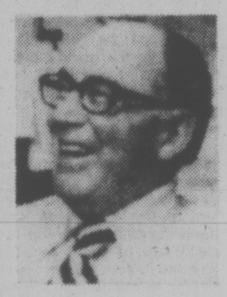
ABOUT YOUR GLASSES


by Ralph Drew, Consultant to the Canadian Guild of Dispensing Opticians
A word about Bifocals:
A golfer might be surprised, and perhaps a little hurt, if you told him that a pair of bifocal lenses was similar, but superior, to the bag of clubs he carries around! But it's true. He totes the heavy clubs because one club won't do for all occasions. In one pair of bifocal lenses are the ingredients for almost all occasions.
A good story, but only partly true! You must have noticed that dozens of different kinds of bifocals are worn. Why so many? There are two reasons. One is the prescription indication, the other is the way the glasses are used.
If prescription needs are specific, your doctor and optician will tell you. But in most cases the same prescription can be compounded in many different bifocal designs. It all depends on your life style, the kind of work and hobbies you have. The choice is an interesting one, and the visual rewards are considerable.
How is the choice made? First, the bifocal is a two-part lens, the upper area usually for distance focussing, the lower part, called the segment, for near use. Either section is larger or smaller according to its practical significance. For example, a person working all day at a desk would have a very wide lower segment, whereas it could be quite small for someone who does very little close work. There are all kinds and sizes of segments to match almost any visual habit, in glass or optical plastic, sun-tinted or clear, you name it. Some, called cosmetic bifocals, have no visible dividing line and look like ordinary single-focus lenses. It shouldn't surprise you how many patients find these interesting! There are even special designs for surgeons, tennis players, plumbers, even opticians.
How do you decide? Your dispensing optician will guide you. He will show you the different bifocal types and explain their application. And, a cautious, conservative man, he won't let you make a wrong decision.
Incidentally, there's a bifocal specially designed for the golfer, to see he marks his card correctly.

HOLY WEEK TOPS CHRISTIAN YEAR

Holy Week begins Sunday to climax the Christian year.

Palm Sunday services of various kinds will be held in Victoria churches commemorating Jesus' triumphal march into Jerusalem.

Services at most churches will be at the usual times.

Some parishes will involve their congregations in services in unique ways.

At Christ Church Cathedral, parishioners will join in reading aloud the passion of Our Lord according to St. Matthew.

At the church of St. David-by-the-sea, regular services will be replaced by Biblical readings of Jesus' betrayal by Judas, the false trial and trumped-up charges, and His death upon the cross.

Anglican Bishop Gartrell will be at St. Saviors services to bring new members into the church through the sacrament of confirmation.

Special services will occur during Holy Week in almost all parishes.

One of interest to Roman Catholics will be the consecration of the holy oils Wednesday night at 7:30 in St. Andrew's Cathedral.

After three vats of oil receive the blessing, their contents are distributed to diocese churches for use in baptism and other sacraments.

"This Mass represents the liturgical source of the holy oils as used in administering the sacraments and the unity of the people under the leadership of the Bishop and priests," said a spokesman at St. Andrew's.

Anglican Opinion Poll To Probe Union Views

By ELEANOR BOYLE
Times Staff

Union of Anglican and United churches in Canada is possible despite recent rejection of the formal Plan of Union by Anglican bishops, says Canon Hilary Butler.

Anglican faithful in Victoria and all over Canada will soon have the chance to tell their national executive council whether they wish to pursue union, he said.

An announcement will be made on Easter Sunday outlining the method parishioners cause to make their feelings on union known.

"It's not a vote, but an opinion poll," said Butler.

Program director of the Anglican diocese of Vancouver Island, Butler was a member of the General Commission on Church Union set up in 1967 to study the possible merger of the two churches in Canada, later joined by the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) in Canada.

The Commission wrote the Plan of Union and By-Laws, published in 1972, which were to be debated and revised to form the cornerstone of union.

But revision was stopped in its tracks recently when members of the Anglican House of Bishops met in Toronto and issued a statement: "Most of us doubt there is serious hope for a successful outcome to further revision process."

"The Plan as it stands will not go through," said Butler in Victoria this week.

People are still discussing it, however, he said.

"Even though the Plan may no longer be a practical scheme for bringing the churches together, it is still a useful document.

"A good deal of the Plan everybody would agree with."

It is valuable to the overall concept of union and may still be a basis for further talks.

United church leaders in Canada are distressed about the Anglican bishops' rejection of the Plan, said Jara Smith of Garden City United in Victoria.

"United Church people on the whole are hurt and angry about it. We don't think the things that divide us (the two churches) are important," she said.

Smith was one of ten B.C. commissioners to the General Council of the United Church of Canada which met last August and approved the Plan almost unanimously.

She is conducting study sessions at her own parish so United faithful can talk about the Plan.

Nine sessions have been held, with the last of these March 17.

"The thing is just to work away at it and have as many joint services and projects as possible (between the two separate churches)" she said.

LBJ's Brother: Pray for World

Sam Houston Johnson was in Victoria Thursday to talk about politics and prayer.

The 61-year-old brother of the late United States president Lyndon Baines Johnson came to the city to meet Trinity Christian Centre pastor Harald Bredersen.

"I heard he was in the same business I'm in," said Johnson about the pastor. "I came to see if we could co-ordinate activities."

That business?

Urging citizens and political leaders to pray for the world situation and that of their countries.

Johnson was accompanied by Jesus Mission Field minister Wayne Neal on the trip from his Austin, Texas home.

Concerned about politics, Johnson spoke on many political issues during the interview, but said, "it's time to put politics aside, we must pray for those in authority . . . those elected to Congress and those elected to the Executive."

The problem of co-existence of a Republican president and a Democratic government shouldn't prevent unity, said Johnson, citing historical evidence.

He said when his brother was leader of the Democratic majority, Republican president Dwight Eisenhower received co-operation in passing major legislation.

He spoke of his concern about the lack of accord between president Gerald Ford and the present American Congress.

LBJ's assistant in the White House after John Connelly left the position, Johnson believes many of America's problems stem from their current refusal to honor their Southeast Asia Treaty Organization (SEATO) agreement with Vietnam.

"Congress refused to give president Nixon and president Ford the money to honor the treaty," he said, alleging the U.S. has never before gone back on its word on an international treaty.

"I praised Nixon for bringing the Vietnam war to a close," said Johnson. "It was done with honor and peace was established."

On the subject of Canada-U.S. relations, Johnson said. "We've been friends and neighbors for a long, long time. If America falls, so will Canada.

"We need help from Canada and they need help from us.

"Through the Monroe Pact, the U.S. will come to the aid of any country which is attacked in the Western hemisphere. So you see, it is important for Canada to know the United States keeps its word, in case Canada is attacked," said Johnson.

"Nothing can happen (to brighten the economic situation) until the leaders get their heads together and look to their countries' good instead of politics."

Gosworth Pastor Inducted

Rev. Charles McKnight closed his own induction service recently by celebrating Benediction as a pastor of Gosworth Road Community Church.

He was inducted into the pastorate of the Associated Gospel Church, 2845 Gosworth in Victoria, by Rev. Jack Hockney, AGC executive secretary.

Pastor McKnight has just moved to Victoria from Carnduff, Sask.

An alumnus of Winnipeg Bible College, he has held three pastorates in Saskatchewan with AGC parishes.

He and his wie have five children and live at 2543 Cedar Hill Rd.

'BACK TO BASICS' CHURCH APPROACH

CHICAGO (NYT) — A decade ago, many liberal Protestant denominations were reeling under the impact of the God-is-dead movement, theologies that were triumphantly secular and a flurry of social activism.

Since then, as the mood has changed, the style and tone of the churches have undergone a major adjustment as well, gradually turning toward a "back-to-basics" approach that stresses the need for sound beliefs and personal faith.

Among other things, church leaders say, the shift signifies a growing uneasiness over what is considered a lack of clarity about such conventional beliefs as God's transcendence, the divinity of Jesus and the promise of eternal life. Spurred in part by the wave of spiritual revival that swept the nation in such forms as the "Jesus movement," the established, historical churches are seeking to restore fundamentals.

Spokesmen insist, however, that the swing does not indicate a rejection of social consciousness but rather a combination of social awareness with stronger biblical and theological bases.

The recent meeting of the governing board of the U.S. National Council of Churches revealed certain aspects of the trend. Though the agenda was characteristic of the council, consistiing largely of pressing crises such as hunger and civil rights, the meeting was the most subdued that some staff workers could remember. Absent were the intensity and urgency that marked such meetings a few years ago. Instead, delegates talked quietly of finding new religious and socially responsible directions.

Significantly, the council during the last year reactivated a long defunct study group on evangelism, normally not a high council priority. The group hopes to provide what many on the council regard as an overdue program to promote spiritual concerns. Many feel the council has strayed too far from the religious pulsebeat of its 42 million constituents among 30 Protestant and Eastern Orthodox groups.

"The more liberal denominations," notes the Rev. Dr. Sterling Cary, president of the council, "have been seen as bing activist. They are now trying to relate action to the faith and to theological reflection." Cary warns, however, that the new emphasis could obscure what he holds to be a legitimate commitment to social issues.

Evangelism and spirituality have been upgraded not only by the council but by several member Protestant bodies. For instance, the 1.3-million-member United Church of Christ, one of the most liberal groups, instituted a serious theological study called "faith crisis" in 1971 after dismissing its social action staff for budgetary reasons.

The Episcopal Church has appointed the first evangelism officer in its history, the Rev. A. Wayne Schwabb.

And the most liberal branch of Lutheranism, the Luthern Church in America, recently engaged in a "theological affirmation" study on baptism that became a leading item on its annual convention schedule last summer.

One explanation for this search for roots is the reaction to the turbulence of the last decade. "There was a profound dissatisfaction with the theologies of the mid-1960s such as the God-is-dead or liberation theology that turned people off and scared them," says Dr. Schubert Ogden, professor of theology at the United Methodist Perkins School of Theology in Dallas. "These fads came and went quickly because they didn't get hold of the issues the church cared about."

Having been faced with such passing movements, Ogden says, the climate was ready for an attempt to "recover an identity that was lost."

A pervasive feeling is that such a recovery is essential to the well-being of the church. "Churches that are serious in what they are doing and can make life meaningful to people will attract people," says the Rev. Dean Kelley, author of "Why the Conservative Churches are Growing." "After all, that's their business."

Lenten Choral Service

Choirs of First United and St. Aidan's United churches will sing Beethoven's The Mount of Olives along with two Handel arias and a Bach cantata in a Lenten service Sunday evening.

The choral service will begin at 7:30 p.m. in First United.

Also taking part will be the chorus and orchestra of the University of Victoria.

A second performance of The Mount of Olives only will be given at St. Aidan's on the evening of Good Friday at 7:30.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By SYDNEY OMARR

Forecast for Sunday, March 23

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Money might exhibit a tendency to slip through your fingers. Enjoy yourself without losing control of situation. Means understand price that is to be paid. Message should become increasingly clear. Vacation, travel opportunities come up for discussion.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Partner, mate may act insurprising manner. Be wise enough not to take anyone for granted. Check legal procedures. You may require document which has been misplaced. Strive to build on solid base.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Short trips, relatives, close neighbors figure prominently. Forces tend to be scattered. You get calls, messages and receive visitors. Member of opposite sex asks perplexing questions. If you analyze, you hold your own. If you do not look beneath surface, you could be embarrassed.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Love and money may not mix. Means if you attempt to equate emotion and finances you could come up empty-handed. Stick to home base. Be diplomatic. It would be error to force issues. You gain if receptive.

LEO (July23-Aug. 22): See persons, situations as they are, not merely as your fantasize them. Be selective. Build self-esteem. Avoid self-deception. Pisces, Virgo individuals are likely to be in picture. Emotional bruise will heal — if you give it a chance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Study Leo message for valuable hint. Relative wants to make concession. Be gracious. Some of your views are vindicated. Know that others will now expect more uof yo. There will be added responsibility.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): It is better now to finish rather than to begin a project. Friend who made promises could be embarrassed. Don't depend too much on other people. You have to make your own inquiries, contacts. Better method of display, distributuion is necessary.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You get bigger slice of pie. Sudden changes are featured. Your sense of security is accented. Your competitive spirit is activated. Leo, Aquarius individuals figure prominently. A new person comes into your life.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You, rise above the petty; you perceive what is important. You are able now to discard the superfluous. Open lines of communication. Long-distance call could change plans. Be flexible. One who taught you in past could repeat performance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You solve problem which seemed to defy solution. Social activity helps chase gloom. Remember diet resolutions. Avoid extremes. Gemini, Sagittarius individuals could play significant roles. Tax, insurance matters cause you to review budget. Include mate, partner in computations.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What seems a setback will actually boomerang in your favor. Includes legal actions — your public relations becomes more of an important factor than in recent past. Do plenty of listening. Someone will reveal something you need to understand.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Light touch is best now — don't attempt to force your views. Be ready for change of scenery. What had been a secret is revealed — to your advantage. A lively associate not only entertains but also informs. Know it and be available.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are inquisitive, would make a good reporter. You are not satisfied to know merely that something happened — you usually insist on knowing why it occurred. Gemini, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. June could be a key month for you in 1975. If single marriage is on horizon.

Forecast for Monday, Mar. 24

ARIES (March 21 — April 19): Lovers' quarrel is on agenda if you fail to control emotions. Give logic equal time. Impulsive actions could prove expensive. Refuse to rush to judgment. Take time to evaluate. Young person may be making unreasonable demands.

TAURUS (April 20 — May 20): Home, security, work and special services are featured. Another Taurus — and a Libra and Scorpio could be in picture. Key is to tread lightly. If diplomatic, you don't frighten prospects. Know it and act accordingly.

GEMINI (May 21 — June 20): Don't be deceived by promises of easy riches. Those who advocate quick money schemes are acting out of desperation. Know it and exhibit sense of humor. Travel plans are changed, delayed or canceled. Pisces plays significant role.

CANCER (June 21 — July 22): Some promises cannot materialize. Know it — study Gemini message. Money, responsibility and authority involve you in trinity. You come alive. You make decisions. You invest in yourself. One you care for is drawn to you. You turn over a new, productive leaf.

LEO (July 23 — Aug. 22): What seemed far away could return in legal area. Means be wary of loopholes. Firm up agreements — in writing. Get expert counsel. Protect your interests. Refuse to take situations, individuals for granted. Aries could play significant role.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 — Sept. 22): Hidden matters surface. Bright light shines on area previously darkened. You get inside story but you don't have direct access to necessary material. Leo plays prominent role. Enlightenment is featured. Face truth — accept it and you will be stronger as result.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 — Oct. 22): Study Aries message for valid hint. Some desires, inclinations — and passions — are going to be diverted. Yes, a new direction enters your life. You can rise above the petty — you can teach and learn. Aquarian figures prominently.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 — Nov. 21): Forces tend to be scattered. Diversify. Remain flexible. Persons with bright ideas make themselves available. Don't permit foolish envy to block progress. Make concessions. Your basic security is spotlighted. You can assure greater happiness by expressing yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 — Dec. 21): Stick to facts; be specific. Avoid tendency to speculate or wander from main theme. Accent is on perception, potential, long-range plans. One who travels could stop long enough to make special request. Be receptive without becoming inextricably involved.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 — Jan. 19): Make inquiries regarding financial commitments. The more curiosity you exhibit, the better for you. Means persist. Don't stand back merely because someone is unctous, aloof or puts on act of superiority. Persist!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 — Feb. 18): Intensified action is featured. Nothing occurs in lukewarm fashion. Know it and protect yourself in clinches. Specifically, those who oppose you — legally or otherwise — make their moves. Strength is on your side and you could strike a mighty blow. Use direction.

PISCES (Feb. 19 — March 20): You see more clearly than usual, even — and especially — your own foibles. Persons who, in past, hid things from you now are willing to share — and to seek your counsel. Health, work, diet — these command more attention than usual.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY your voice could be atrractive. You are prideful, charming and somewhat arrogant. Members of opposite sex tend to spoil you. April should be a most significant month. Taurus, Scorpio and Libra play key roles in your life. You are original, daring, inventive and you arouse envy. You're not the most popular person, but you are respected.

CBC Outlet in Victoria Worth Fighting For

audrey johnson

If a poll were taken on the current situation in which television channel 10 is up for grabs, its a pretty sure bet it would reveal majority of people in Victoria couldn't care less what the outcome is.

A fair number might be irked if the last channel available on the normal VHF spectrum was set aside for educational purposes as is the desire of the B.C. government.

But in general I'm certain pollsters would meet with an apathetic response as to whether the public wants Vancouver to get a third station or Victoria a private, government or CBC outlet.

It concerns me deeply that it should be so. Apathy, that dank cloud that muffles most issues in this area and has sent many a worthwhile scheme into oblivion, will have its way.

The fact that Victoria is the only capital city in Canada without a CBC station is a matter of little concern among the people who ought to be concerned about such things.

It's exactly parallel to the indifference at all official levels to the fact that Victoria will soon be about the only incorporated city in Canada without an up-to-date, decently equipped concert hall facility.

As a matter of fact there are strong reasons — outside of whether CBC programming turns you off or on — for supporting CBC's wish to located in channel 10 in Victoria.

The public corporation's intention has been made positive by its present purchasing negotiation with the city for property immediately behind the Victoria Press building.

Its proviso that the purchase will not be concluded if its bid is turned down finally by the CRTC in April — it has already received a thumbs-down reaction from Communications Minister Gerard Pelletier — is inevitable. With channel 10 gone it will be years before CBC or anything as good as the U.S. public broadcasting channel nine, gets a chance to locate in Victoria.

As to the value of these types of operations locating in a city, let me spell it out. The segment of the population that would benefit directly is not large perhaps, but the related benefits would spread over a wide circle.

After a decade of steady growth on the part of Victoria Symphony and in the Conservatory of Music and UVic music deapertment, this city is bulging with talent — superb students of concert-stage statute, great teachers and professional performers.

We have Trio Victoria, the Pacific Wind Quintet, Western Brass and other top level professional ensembles. We have Amity Singers, already attaining the standard of many noted Canadian vocal groups.

Says Murray Adaskin, one of this country's most respected and experienced music personalities: "The talent in this city is of a calibre that would be eagerly sought in any city, in any major broadcasting studio."

Our reputation in this field is beginning to filter across the country. But the big question at the present time is, are we going to be able to sustain it, let alone enhance it? It's a question wholly based on economics.

All these people love to live in Victoria. They love the atmosphere and the pace. But with families and future to consider, can they afford to continue to do so?

When next season rolls around we will have lost a fine first desk violinist from the symphony — Trudi Conrad, a Victorian, an excellent teacher and musician with years of study abroad behind her. She goes to Calgary Symphony this year.

Also gone will be the symphony's great first trombone, George Krem, off to Winnipeg with his valuable pianist wife, Ludene.

They are reluctant to leave but they can earn as much in a couple of months in Calgary and Winnipeg as they can in a year in Victoria.

A second attraction Winnipeg has for good musicians such as Krem is the fact that the Winnipeg Symphony and the various chamber ensemble groups that evolve from it frequently perform on the city's CBC radio and television outlets.

The nationwide exposure as well as the improved financial situation are obviously important considerations to a professional artist.

In Saskatoon, where Adaskin was chairman of the music department of University of Saskatchewan before his retirement, "we fought hard to get a CBC station," he tells you.

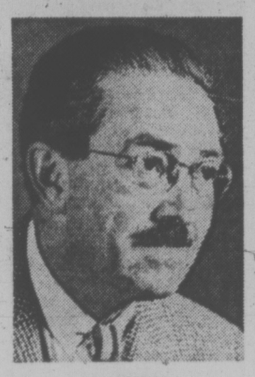
"In the end all we got was a relay station," he says, "with the principal benefit being a better signal."



ADASKIN
. . . we're ready

"But Victoria is ready for a proper station with a studio production centre," Adaskin insists.

"Why, with the amount of quality talent and skill we have here we could go on for years providing the finest kinds of programs. The symphony should certainly be heard nation-wide but has only minimal opportunity through Vancouver CBC taping."

With very few exceptions, in fact, CBU and CBUT devote a mere fraction of broadcast time in the course of a year to Victoria artists.

Victoria deserves and needs a studio with an adequate budget for live programming. Victorians should fight for that, but will they?

If there is anyone out there who believes and cares, they could do something about it. They can write a letter to the chairman of the Canadian Television and Radio Commission in Ottawa, making sure to mail it well before April 22, the date of the next and crucial meeting.

$95M Sales By Milk Producers

CHILLIWACK (CP) — The Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association reported it had gross sales of almost $95 million in 1974, an increase of nearly $20 million over the previous year.

The largest dairy co-operative in the province had production of 469 million pounds of milk, its annual meeting was told, and its 794 shippers received average gross payments of $60,797 or 51 per cent of the co-operative's gross sales.

The association has shippers on Vancouver Island and the central B.C. Interior as well as throughout the Fraser Valley and handles about 60 per cent of the milk produced in B.C.

Dealers Sue Own Oil Firm

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Its own independent dealers have filed a suit against Standard Oil of California, alleging that the firm lowered prices at company-operated stations while boosting the wholesale price to the independents.

The suit was filed in United States District Court by 116 northern California service station operators.

It asks the court to stop Standard from allegedly lowering gasoline prices by up to three cents a gallon at company-operated stations while increasing wholesale prices 3.8 cents a gallon for independent operators. The suit seeks no money for alleged damages.

A Standard spokesman said the suit was "without foundation, without merit," but declined to discuss specifics of the case.

"In the past 25 years, Standard or no other oil company has ever increased the wholesale price for its independents and reduced the retail price for its own operated stations — without at least giving credits to independents," said James Campbell, chief of the California Service Station Association.

Guest Conductor

The second of two concert pairs in which guest conductor Juan Matteucci is on the Victoria Symphony podium takes place Sunday and Monday at the Royal Theatre.

Once again the solo spot under the New Zealand maestro's baton will be occupied by orchestra principals.

The work to be performed is Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante in E flat major for oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon, and the players will be Eileen Gibson, Timothy Paradise, Richard Ely and Jesse Read.

Major work for the orchestra is Dvorak's sixth symphony. The program will open with Respighi's beautiful tone poem, Fountains of Rome.

ROLLING STONE

It's More Than Country

By BUD SCOPPA

When the Byrds recorded Sweetheart of the Rodeo in 1968, the romance between country music and pop was still secret. Now, seven years later, both country and country-incluence pop are all but mainsteam.

But Sweetheart itself still seems distinct from the cliched and shallow music it helped inspire. The difference was Gram Parsons, the only genuine innovator to emerge from this. A native Southerner, he's grown up with twin passions for old-time country and rock and roll, and he'd begun making music of his own with these passions still fully intact.

Parsons never made contact with that hoped-for audience before he died in 1974 — but he made some great music. His six albums, through the final heartbreaking Grievous Angel, include literally every noteworthy work to be associated with the country-rock movement.

If Parsons' haunting music never reached a sizable audience, it did deeply touch a succession of worthy musicians, and Parsons made the most of each partnership: with Roger McGuinn and Chris Hillman in the Byrds; with Hillman, Sneaky Pete and Chris Ethridge in the Flying Burrito Brothers; and, finally, with Emmylou Harris on his two solo albums, G.P. and Grievous Angel.

Now Emmylou Harris is ready — after some initial persuasion — to incorporate Parsons' convictions into her own work. Harris isn't a lifelong country devotee, even though she grew up way down South in Birmingham, Alabama. But while working with Parsons, she caught his fever for the rigidly expressive, high-droning sound of old-fashioned country.

On her own, Harris has, like her old partner, bypassed Nashville altogether, preferring to work clubs with her band in her present home area, Washington, D.C., and to record her own solo album in Los Angeles with many of the same musicians Parsons had used. Present-day Nashville has very little to do with the music on Pieces of the Sky.

Harris's album is superficially a country album, to about the same extent Linda Ronstadt's Heart Like a Wheel is. But whereas Ronstadt stays primarily with recently written, neo-country material and young country-oriented pop musicians, Harris has laced her recording generously with familiar warhorses on both counts. There are old songs — by Charlie and Ira Louvin, Felice and Boudleaux Bryant — plus vintage-sounding newer tunes, while crusty old pickers like James Burton and Glen D. Hardin are around to lend a hand. Despite the differences in approach, the clear focus of each album is the lead voice.

While Ronstadt has a full-bodied sonority to her voice, giving her great power in the dramatic passages of the songs she sings, Harris has a softer, almost fragile turn in hers that belies its basic sturdiness. Emmylou tends to underplay her lines, giving her vocal sound the drama of vulnerability rather than that of all-out passion. Her duet with herself on the Everly Brothers' tune, "Sleepless Nights" (which she once recorded to heartbreaking perfection with Parsons on a never released track), is restrained to a point not far above a whisper, but the mournful sincerity of her singing gives the track unquestionable intensity. Her rendering of the Beatles' "For No One" (which producer Brian Ahern persuaded her to record) is nearly as understated, with a small string ensemble and a spun-silk guitar solo by Amos Garrett beautifully reinforcing the close, shadowy mood.

Emmylou can convey a sense of sweet fragility without holding back to those extremes, as she shows in her delightful duet with Herb Pederson (late of the Dillards) on the Louvins' "If I Could Only Win Your Love," her faithful rendition of Dolly Parton's "Coat of Many Colors" and "Boulder to Birmingham," the album's most commercial track and the only Harris original (co-written with Washingtonian Billie Danoff).

On Pieces of the Sky, the greater the challenge the song provides, the more inspired Emmylou's performance becomes. The album's least-riveting moments come from its most upbeat, least passionate songs: Merle Haggard's "The Bottle Let Me Down," Shel Silverstein's "Queen of the Silver Dollar" (an unintentional parody of a country song that's the only obvious error in material selection), and "Bluebird Wine," a catchy but slight tune by a young Texan named Rodney Crowell.

With Ahern's production touch a good deal lighter than his work with Ann Murray, and with a bunch of knowledgeable old hands playing along, Emmylou has received a backdrop that's more than fair, more than sympathetic. And she's responded with a performance sufficiently impressive and winning to make Pieces of the Sky a classy, durable record. Aside from having that miraculous voice, she has great personal charm made up in proportionate parts of intelligence, honesty and self-effacement — and (as the cover makes obvious) she's very pretty in an appropriately rustic way. Even though Pieces of the Sky is — like Parsons' records — more a country album than just about anything to come out of Nashville in years Harris's exceptional musical and personal appeal should be sufficient to put her in touch with a good many non-country listeners.

Experience Props New Stage Group

Lifelong involvement with the theatre, professional and amateur, respect for each other's accomplishments and enthusiasm for acting as a group, are attributes of the director and principals of Victoria Actors Association.

This is the new theatre company that, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week will be presenting the hilarious British comedy, Move Over Mrs. Markham, at McPherson Playhouse.

For director Allan Purdy, Mrs. Markham will be the 30th production he has directed and/or acted in, in 13 years' residence in Victoria.

He is a past president of the Victoria Theatre Guild and among his notable successes there have been The Miracle Worker, T. S. Eliot's The Cocktail Party and Breath of Spring.

For the Victoria Operatic Society he is well remembered for his direction of Sound of Music, Oklahoma, The King and I, and last fall's Man of La Mancha.

Of the principals in Mrs. Markham most are known to local audiences for their fine sense of comedy. Jack Droy, a former pro who describes himself as "a show-biz actor," first came to this city as a member of the York and its successor, the Totem, repertory companies that occupied the McPherson Playhouse a few years before its renovation and re-naming.

Carolyn Stephenson was a repertory actress in England before her marriage to Dr. Charles Stephenson and has played a number of delightful roles on local stages.

Sheila Litt's long association in many good roles with the Theatre Guild and Janet Senior's starry career with the VOS have made them notable personalities.

Unplumbed comedy depths are appearing in Colin Skinner's characterization, according to reports from the rehearsal scene. Among former outstanding things he has done for UVic, VOS, and others were Lucifer and The Serpent in The Play of Adam, Fagin in Oliver and the title role in Man of La Mancha.

John Britt has played a considerable variety of parts in the past 10 years, ranging from young Father Rose in Hadrian VII to one of the horses in La Mancha.

Another VOS performer, Mary Bissenden and newcomer Donna Heighes, complete the cast with a bit part being taken by the director.

A Trendy Horror

A Film Review
By Nora Hutchison

Suppose the opportunity actually existed to replace an irritating wife with a more glamorous mechanical equivalent who was programmed to take care of every domestic and sexual need — how many husbands could resist? That's the threat The Stepford Wives face in this film based on a novel by Ira Levin.

The town of Stepford is a posh bedroom community full of upwardly-mobile suburbanites. All its women seem to be big bosomed and small brained — or so it appears to the movie's heroine, Joanna (Katharine Ross). She's just moved into town after a crowded, polluted, but apparently fulfilling life in the city where she'd even "messed around with Women's Lib." While her husband practices law and her kids go to school, she takes photographs and sells them to galleries. Digging around for some friends to share her enthusiasms with, she finds only dedicated housewives who chatter like actresses on TV commercials.

"Well, there used to be a Women's Club," one wife confides, "but it wasn't accomplishing anything useful." It turns out that the husbands felt threatened by their wives' consciousness-raising efforts, and punished them all by turning them into robots.

A horror movie with a women's lib theme, how au courant can the industry get? The idea of an all-out war between husbands and wives is a natural for the screen, and full of satiric potential. If it had been produced with more thought and attention to its comic possibilities, it could have been a slyly humorous fable for our time. Unfortunately, director Bryan Forbes and his screenwriter have let the plot's possibilities slip through their fingers.

The film doesn't work either as a sophisticated horror piece or as a sci-fi thriller because the director can't seem to make up his mind which way to go. The script doesn't offer much inspiration — the situations are befuddling, and the dialogue seldom makes anything clearer. For the movie to affect us, the characters would have to be more convincing; their actions should have some psychological validity.

Before we can feel horror at Joanna's impending fate as another of Stepford's "victims" we need to feel sympathy for her — but she's difficult to respond to. In spite of her "gift" for photography (an easy way out of writing a character with some life in her to lose), and her fear of suburbia's encroaching blandness, there's very little about Joanna to distinguish her from her robot neighbors. The character should be created as a strong, dynamic personality so that her dehumanization will really be a loss. Katharine Ross is lovely to look at, but she's a tentative actress who doesn't project the sort of energy the role requires, and her interpretation of Joanna is not far off the "ideal wife" from the start.

The male characters are disappointing, too. As the villains of the piece they could have been very creepy in their smug complacency but neither they nor the director seem to have considered this.

The movie's implication that men are happier with a domestic wonder-woman who will cater exclusively to their comfort feeds on both sexes' fear, guilt feelings and even subliminal longings. However, it's really only a horror movie for the woman who wants to "mess around with women's lib" but is afraid to try.

UNITED WAY NAME CHANGE CONSIDERED

The Community Chest of Greater Victoria may change its name to The United Way of Greater Victoria to match its well-known slogan.

A general meeting of members has been called for March 26 at 4 p.m. in the auditorium of G. R. Pearkes Clinic to consider a resolution on the name change.

The society's annual general meeting will follow, with election of officers and presentations of 1974 reports.

Members will tour the clinic half an hour before the meeting.

FIREWORKS SMUGGLERS ELUDE HONG KONG BAN

By FRANK CHUAN

HONG KONG (Reuter) — Firecrackers, which have put the bang into Chinese festivals for centuries, still are being smuggled here from China despite a ban since left-wing riots in the British colony in 1967.

Police say the fireworks continue to find their way into the New Territories, bordering China, despite intensive official crackdowns.

In two incidents this year, police have seized a total of 1,300 pounds of firecrackers from trucks and arrested a woman. She was charged with possession of banned goods and jailed for three months.

A senior police officer in the New Territories said roadblocks were being set up daily to stop vehicles suspected of carrying the cigarette-shaped crackers, which had been used by extremists to make bombs.

It is customary for Chinese people to let off fireworks during festivities. Traditionally they believe that this will drive away evil spirits.

Official figures showed that 157 men and 85 women were arrested last year for possessing the banned goods. About 4,610 pounds of firecrackers were seized.

A police officer in the New Territories said there were no signs that the popularity of the noisy crackers would diminish in the near future.

"One can hear bursts of firecrackers in the first few night of the Chinese New Year," he said. "There are people who even play with them in the daytime.

"But it is difficult to catch the culprits, as it is hard to pinpoint where they are being let off."

Firecrackers are also popular on outer islands among fishermen and villagers during the spring festival, police said.

However, they are not common in urban areas because they cannot be bought easily.

When the government introduced its ban, many people supported the move because it meant less noise in the crowded city area. Fire hazards and the risk of being maimed were reduced.

The ban came in at the height of the disturbances more than seven years ago, because leftists were using explosive material from the crackers to produce home-made bombs which killed several people including children and policemen.

Violence Frays London Image

LONDON (Reuter) — Violence is on the increase in London and the city's reputation for respect of law and order is fraying.

One London newspaper has said that in the borough of Lambeth, across the Thames from Buckingham Palace, a pedestrian is statistically more likely to be mugged than in New York.

The paper calculated that one person in 150 gets mugged or assaulted every year in Lambeth compared with one in 200 in New York.

Tales of mugging and street violence are increasingly finding their way into the British press.

The muggings have an aspect that, because of race implications, has virtually been unmentionable until recent weeks: four in five Lambeth attackers, say police, are black, and four in five of their victims are white.

Lambeth includes the district of Brixton, which has the highest concentration of West Indian immigrants in Britain.

Said one Brixton resident: "Everybody is conscious of the muggings. They usually take the form of purse-snatching. Two or three youths will approach a woman and one will grab her handbag as the others jostle her.

Between 1969 and 1973, street robbery with the use of threat of violence increased by 147 per cent in Lambeth. Last year's figures will certainly be worst ever. The record was nearly as bad in neighboring districts.

The Sunday Times, in a recent investigation, said some youths were subsisting solely on the proceeds of street crime.

The leader of a gang which specialized in thefts from parked cars for eight years old. Drunks have been a choice target and a spate of petty holdups has been reported at corner shops.

In a special report now being studied by Home Secretary Roy Jenkins, Scotland Yard denied that the soaring street crime in South London is a policing problem and points to widespread alienation and isolation of West Indian youngsters from white society.

Many are descendants of West Indians who came here in the 1950s and 1960s, often recruited by labor-hungry organizations such as London Transport.

Despite some improvement in race relations in Britain, few sociologists deny that black youngsters are at the bottom of the heap as far as their opportunities for education and careers go.

Lambeth's stately mid-Victorian houses now are largely given over to the often overcrowded housing of poor families.

In Lambeth, thousands of black youngsters have developed a sub-culture based on marijuana and black music which is almost impossible for outsiders to penetrate.

There are the Soul Guys, who like American-style clubs and dancing; the Reggae Guys, snappy dressers who go for the Jamaican culture and records, and the Rasta Guys, with their "orange skins" or knitted woolen skull caps.

Leaders of Britain's black community are, if anything, more worried about the problem than white authorities.

Some fear a white backlash against the colored community, the vast mapority of whom are hard-working and respectable.

Mark Bonham Carter, chairman of the government-sponsored Community Relations Commission, said: "The recent reported rise in street crime among black youth in South London has grave implications for race relations in Britain."

ON BEHALF OF ALL MY FAMILY, I would like to thank the staff of Mt. Tolmie Nursing Home for the exceptional love and care they extended to our Mother, Mrs. Povah. We truly appreciate it. And a special thanks to Dr. Stirling for his attentiveness. Mrs. Joyce Little

9 IN MEMORIAM

GENNO — George who passed away March 23, 1974.
You were here and smiling
And suddenly were gone,
Leaving only memories to Think and dwell upon.
Although you're not here with us
You're remembered every day
For the happiness you've left us
Means much more than words can say.
—Ever remembered by his loving wife, Germaine and family.

SOLOMON—In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Douglas, who passed away March 21, 1971. Fondly remembered by Georgina, Neil and Karen, and mother and family in England.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD, AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD. AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
—WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS.

Aid Sought In Search For Gunman

Saanich police have issued an appeal to the public for assistance in locating a man who abducted a teen-age girl in Saanich Thursday night.

Police said the 17-year-old victim walking on Tillicum near Burnside at 9:45 p.m. was forced at gun point into a car and driven to a remote area where she was made to perform an indecent act.

She was released unharmed after being driven part way back to where she had been picked up. Police were called at 10:15 p.m.

The man is described as between 25 and 30 years old, five feet 10 inches tall, medium build with collar-length brown hair and a Fu Manchu mustache. He wore a light colored shirt, blue jeans and brown shoes.

Police said the car used was a "dirty red" Toyota sedan with black interior and bucket seats.

Driver Charged

A 24-year-old man faces a charge of criminal negligence following an incident early this morning when a man rammed his car into another in the parking lot of the Old Forge, 919 Douglas causing about $4,000 damages to both vehicles.

William Utterson of 879½ Admirals was scheduled to appear in Victoria provincial court this morning.

Canadian Oil Report Gloomy

By FRANK RUTTER
Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Canada has delivered to Americans a gloomy report on the future of oil and natural gas exports to this country.

The report was given to all 435 members of the U.S. Congress on Friday and a total of 5,000 copies have been printed for distribution here and across the U.S.

The report makes it clear that Americans cannot rely much longer on Canadian oil exports and that gas exports are going to become much more expensive.

The four-page document was prepared by the Canadian embassy here, with assistance from Ottawa.

"Earlier assumptions of an inexhaustible Canadian sea of oil and gas awaiting discovery to fuel the continent have been scaled down to coincide with the new realities," the report says.

In fact, Canada itself can expect to become a net importer of oil by the early1980s, the report adds.

"Canadians crude oil production has peaked and there is little prospect of dramatic new discoveries in conventional oil-producing regions," it says.

"The frontier areas — though rich in potential — hold little promise of additional crude oil supplies within the next several years."

But it then dampens further hopes that the frontier areas — such as the oil sands in Alberta or the Arctic — will eventually bring about renewed supplies for export to the U.S.

The report says that exploration and development in these areas "will require massive commitments of capital, material and new technology," and points out the financial difficulties which have afflicted the Athabasca oil sands proposals.

As for the Arctic, including offshore islands and the Mackenzie Delta, as well as offshore Atlantic prospects, the report says that oil discoveries "have not involved volumes substantial enough to justify investment in transportation facilities.

"The age of discovery in these areas would not justify such optimism as to early frontier production," the report says.

"The supply prospects for natural gas have also been of increasing concern to the Canadian government," the report adds. It holds out no hope of speedy developments of Arctic gas, despite applications to build pipelines to move it to U.S. and Canadian markets.

"Most frontier natural gas is still only a potential resource which will require considerable time and capital investment to prove and bring to market," the report says.

It goes on to warn that higher gas prices, both in Canada and for exports to the U.S., are "appropriate."

Export prices were increased late last year and will be raised again over the next three years under recommendations made by the National Energy Board.

But the report warns that the federal government has not tied itself to the amount of the timing of "further periodic increases until natural gas reaches its full commodity value."

MICROSCOPE SPOTS NEW CANCER THREAT

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (UPI, — Spermatozoa may be linked to cancer of the cervix in women and prostate gland in men, a New York City scientist said Saturday.

Dr. Ellen Borenfreund said test tube studies at the Memorial Sloan-Kettering cancer center showed that sperm can invade body cells and cause abnormal growth characteristics resembling early signs of cancer development.

The use of powerful microscopes showed that sperm heads made their way to the nucleus of ordinary body cells. In its normal fertilization role, the sperm has to penetrate a complex series of cell layers and membranes of the female egg. Regular cells have no such armor.

"We believe that these laboratory findings merit serious considerations in view of the high incidence of prostatic and cervica cancer," Dr. Borenfreund told a science writers seminar. "It is possible that prostatic and cervical cancer might be initiated by sperm."

Mortgage Relief

WASHINGTON (WP) — For the first time since the Great Depression, Congress is working on legislation to protect unemployed homeowners from mortgage foreclosures.

A little noticed bill — the "Emergency Homeowners' Relief Act" — cleared 12 to 1 by a house subcommittee Friday — would provide loans of up to $250 a month for two years to enable homeowners unemployed or underemployed by the recession to keep up their mortgage payments.

Meanwhile, the house passed a bill intended to stimulate the depressed housing industry by subsidizing mortgage interest rates, in hopes of encouraging middle-income families to buy homes.

The vote was 259 to 106.

The loans in the house banking subcommittee's relief bill could be used to pay principal, interest, taxes and insurance.

Storms Stymie Rescue

TACOMA, Wash. (UPI) — Rescue aircraft bucked strong winds and snow storms today in an effort to positively identify as a missing U.S. Air Force Starlifter the wreckage of a large plane spotted on Warrior Peak in the Olympic Mountains west of Tacoma.

The wreckage was seen shortly before nightfall Friday near the 5,000-foot level of the 7,300-foot mountain. There was no sign of any of the 16 persons aboard the C-141 which went down late Thursday while making a landing approach toward McChord Air Force Base.

"I saw three big pieces of the airplane — a piece of fuselage, a tail section and part of wing — all rolled up in a huge snowball at the base of the cliff," said Army W.O. Edward Cleves, commander of a search helicopter from Ft. Lewis.

At dawn Saturday, three helicopters joined an HC-130 search and rescue plane in an attempt to relocate the wreckage.

"Searchers have not been able to get close enough to confirm positively that the wreckage spotted yesterday on the west side of Warrior Peak is that of the missing McChord C-141 Starlifter," an air force spokesman said.

The plane was on a regular run between Yokota AFB near Tokyo and McChord. It carried 10 air force crewmen and six navy personnel passengers.

A locator beacon aboard the Starlifter was activated on impact and a C-130 using electronic gear located the general area of the crash.

But gale force winds and blowing snow and sleet plus a thick cloud cover hampered search efforts from the time they started early Friday.

Ground parties worked their way on snowshoes to within two miles of the crash site before being stymied Friday by darkness, avalanche conditions and extremely cold weather.

Educational TV Outlet Promoted for Province

Recreation and education groups were urged today to support an educational television outlet for B.C.

Bruce Hardy, president of the Victoria Sierra Club, told a conference at Camosun College on recreational uses of wildland that both Ontario and Quebec have been awarded education television outlets by the federal government.

He suggested the conference discuss the future allocation of Channel 10.

Earlier this week the federal cabinet decided not to interfere at a public meeting to be held in Vancouver to consider applications to reserve Channel 10 for commercial use.

Both the province and CBC have requested that Channel 10 be reserved for education — the last television outlet in B.C.

The conference is attended by representatives from 10 recreation and conservation groups, ranging from horsemen to yachtsmen.

UVIC BLED DRY

Students, faculty and other staff at the University of Victoria bled freely over the past three days to set a new record for Red Cross blood donor clinics.

Friday's clinic produced 291 donors to bring the total from clinics starting Wednesday to 893, well over the target of 775.

It's the best series of clinics at the university in 12 years, Red Cross spokesman Gerry Savage said today. "We're very pleased indeed."

Clinics earlier bring the week's total to 1,141.

Barge Lift Set

The lifting of a barge which sank in 220 feet of water 1½ miles offshore at Pat Bay March 8 is scheduled to begin 8 a.m. Monday.

A spokesman for Case Existological Laboratories Ltd., the barge's owners, said it could take anywhere from five to eight days to lift the $500,000 barge.

A crane with 200 and 100-ton lifts will be used.

"We are going to check the air integrity of the (barge's) tanks," he said. "If they are intact we will use the air in them as well as the cranes."

President John Case reports the barge, only one of its kind, is insured for $300,000. It was being used as a floating laboratory for the Controlled Ecosystem Pollution Experiment, a five-year $10 million project.

The barge had been moored in Patricia Bay for seven months, remaining stable in 50-knot winds, but sank on a calm day.

CASE will make a full investigation into the cause of the barge's sinking.

Task Force To Probe Coal Use

A top-level provincial government task force has been established to develop strategy options for coal use in B.C., Mines Minister Leo Nimsick said.

Headed by Hart Horn, associate deputy minister of mines, the force will also advise the government on the formulation of a long-term policy for developing coal reserves in the province.

Force members are: Bill Armstrong, chairman of the B.C. Universities Council; David Cass-Beggs, of B.C. Hydro; A. E. Peel, economic development deputy minister and Andrew Thompson, B.C. Energy Commission chairman.

The task force will initially develop an inventory of provincial coal and coal rights for domestic steel-making in energy generation and for other uses such as coal gasification and coal-based chemcial production.

Metric Chart Trial Balloon

It is chart 3481-Approaches to Vancouver Harbor — and 4,000 have been printed for free distribution.

A total of 2,500 have already been given away — 80 to the navy, 700 to pleasure boaters attending the Vancouver boat show, and many others to tug companies and the marine industry.

"So far, by the questionnaires we sent out with the charts, it looks as if boaters like the format," Fred Smithers, regional superintendent of charts, said. "A principal characteristic is that, using more depth contours, the chart gives more of the topography features of the bottom."

He emphasized the free distribution is to encourage feedback from boaters. There are still 1,500 at the department's office on the fifth floor of the main post office building at 1230 Government.

Height and depth units are shown in metres on the chart and soundings are shown on shoals and deeps through passages and along the depth contours.

Smithers explained an easy way for boaters to begin thinking in metres, rather than fathoms, is to think of a metre as being about one yard.

"A metre is 39.37 inches," he said, "So if you take a metre as a yard you're giving yourself a fair amount of leeway."

Smithers and his department face a mammoth task if they are to meet the department's edict that all charts should be converted to the metric system by 1980.

There are four more metric charts under way, one for Pitt Lake on the mainland and three for approaches to Prince Rupert.

Also high on the priority list are five more metric charts. These are for Victoria and Esquimalt harbors and their approaches, Saanich Inlet, Haro Strait and Malaspina Strait.

"The main ones are Victoria and Vancouver," Smithers said, "they have to be among the first."

An extension of the strip chart program, which produced the first strip charts in 1973, designed for small pleasure boats, is also in the works.

The hydrographic department also has a program for an intensive survey of the west coast of Vancouver Island this year in preparation for the meticulously detailed charts that will be needed once the large supertankers start plying our coast.

Phone Privilege Abused

WOODBRIDGE, N.J. (AP, — Convicts in New Jersey prisons have the right to make private telephone calls. But authorities had to remind one prisoner that the right doesn't include obscene phone calls.

A spokesman for the state department of intitutions said Wednesday that obscene phone calls received by female employees at four branches of a Union County banking firm had been traced to a sex offender at Rahway State Prison here.

The convict, Robert Barry, 36, of Trenton is serving a 15-year sentence for several sex offences, including rape, assault with intent to rape and carnal indecency.

Heating Blood Cancer Weapon

By STUART AUERBACH
Washington Post

HOUSTON — A surgeon here has more than tripled the chances of his patients surviving one of the hardest cancers to treat by heating their blood to 110 degrees.

To make sure that other parts of the body are not injured by the high temperatures the blood in the affected limb is isolated from the rest of the blood circulating in the body by a tight tourniquet. To aid the treatment, a powerful anti-cancer drug is circulated with the heated blood going to the cancerous limb.

Using this treatment on 30 patients suffering from severe cases of the hard-to-treat cancer known as melonoma, which generally occurs in the limbs Dr. John S. Stehlin Jr. and his team at the St. Joseph's Hospital Laboratory For Cancer Research here have achieved a 76.7 per cent survival after five years.

Earlier treatment using the drug alone, produced a 22.2 per cent survival rate after five years, Stehlin reported in the current issue of the medical journal Surgery, Gynecology and Obsterics. Survival for 10 years is considered a cure for most forms of cancer.

Melanoma is a cancer of pigment cells in the skin that generally starts as a small raised mole and often spreads from the limbs to internal organs of the body. It kills an estimated 5,000 Americans a year.

Dr. Edmund Klein, a cancer specialist at the Roswell Park Memorial Institute at Buffalo, N.Y., called Stehlin's melanoma treatment "about as good as there is. Unfortunately no treatment is very good with that form of cancer"

Up to now Stehlin has concentrated on treating cancers in limbs but he is optimistic about his results and has just begun using heat to treat lung cancer, the greatest cancer killer of Americans and a cancer that has a five per cent survival rate with surgery.

Stehlin, using laboratory animals, is also studying the possibility of using heat to treat liver cancer, which kills about 9,800 Americans a year and for which there is no good treatment at the present time.

Scientists have known since the 1930s that for some mysterious reason heat kills cancer cells before it kills most normal cells. Moreover, there have been reports in the medical literature for the last 100 years that cancer patients who get a high fever experience a sudden and unexplained decrease in their cancer cells.

The problem, however, has been finding that norrow temperature zone in which cancer cells are killed but normal ones are not affected. Stehlin admits there are risks which he said have given the treatment "a bad name."

Stehlin said that he overheated three limbs in some of his first melanoma treatments, seven years ago, and had to amputate them. But, he added, the normal treatment for the disease would have been amputation.

In his treatment Stehlin pumps blood in an affected limb with a machine generally used to provide oxygen during open heart surgery. A heater is attached to the pump.

When the blood temperature reaches 102 degrees, the drug phenylalanine mustard is added. When the blood reaches 110 degres, the temperature of the skin is 102 to 105 degrees — about 20 degrees above normal.

Stehlin continues the heat treatment for 45 minutes to two hours, depending on the amount of cancer and the general health of the patient. Most patients need only one treatment, but one has had four.

Stehlin said the cancerous nodes in the skin don't fall off. Instead, "they literally sink into the body after treatment, they disintegrate," he said.

He said these disintegrating cells trigger the body's immune defence system to fight any cancer that has spread to other parts of the body.

"I maintain," he said in an interview, "that this is a stimulation of the patient's own immune reponse against his own cancer cells. We are not crazy enough to think that heat is killing cancer."

IVORY 'SLAUGHTER'

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — The narwhal and walrus could be wiped out of the Canadian Arctic unless Eskimos stop slaughtering the animals for their valuable ivory tusks, warns a federal fisheries officer.

Hugh Trudeau of Yellowknife made his grim prediction after reports that 200 narwhal were killed at the tiny settlement of Arctic Bay, on the northern part of Baffin Island, and that 200 walrus were shot at another small Eskimo community, Hall Beach on the Melville Peninsula.

Trudeau, who calls those kills "very excessive," blamed them on the soaring price of ivory, which is reported to be selling for more than $25 a pound, and on inadequate government regulations.

"If this (ivory hunting) isn't controlled' I'm sure the populations will be exterminated," he said.

The numbers of narwhal and walrus killed might not sounjd high and Artic Bay and Hall Beach are likely the highest-kill areas, but Trudeau said no one knows for certain how many were killed and no one knows for certain how many animals exist.

"We know very little about the narwhal, and even less about the walrus."

There are an estimated 10,000 narwhal, which are 10-to 18-foot-long animals, some of which have spearlike ivory tusks or horns and weigh more than a ton.

Trudeau calls it an optimistic estimate. There is no estimate available on the walrus population.

Assuming there are 10,000 narwhal, no more than 600 to 800 should be slaughtered in one year, the fisheries officer said. An accurate count of kills is difficult to determine because many of the narwhal sink to the ocean floor before the hunters can haul them in.

Ellis Land, a territorial game officer in Frobisher Bay, N.W.T., said: "You're harvesting a resource for which you don't know the population and you don't know how many are killed."

"That's a very dangerous game."

However, Land said the people of Arctic Bay are discussing the possibility of establishing a quota on narwhal.

"I hope they come to some voluntary agreement," he said.

EYE SALE ON DESPITE AID

KANE, Pa. (AP) — Donald Schlopy, who offered to sell an eye to support his children, has received thousands of dollars in donations and been told he no longer is jobless. But he says the offer still stands.

"There's been a lot of talk going around about whether I started this as a gimmick and never intended to sell the eye to begin with," Schlopy said.

"I'm going to stick with my offer."

Schlopy says his wife left him four years ago, and he is raising three children in this northwestern Pennsylvania town. He says he lost his job earlier this month as a shipping clerk, owing about $4,000 then sold "everything worth selling" in the house.

Then he placed a newspaper advertisement in nearby Erie last week offering an eye for $5,000 or the best offer.

Schlopy says he has since received about 100 letters a day, many with cash and cheques enclosed. The total so far is $4,862. He says he has also been called back to his job, but that doesn't change things.

"I want to buy a house trailer and furniture to provide a decent home for the kids," he said. "I want to do that and also pay off my debts, so even with the money I got in the mail, I'll sell the eye."

He says two potential buyers, a Florida woman who wants the eye for a son in California and another person from East Liverpool, Ohio. Schlopy said he is checking the Florida offer first.

Adventure School Lures Hundreds For Self-Testing

INVERNESS, Scotland (CP) — John Ridgway says he rowed across the North Atlantic because "I wanted to test myself."

For the last six years, hundreds of men, women and children have been able to test themselves under less hazardous conditions at the John Ridgway School of Adventure in the Scottish Highlands.

At Ardmore, on the shore of Loch Laxford 100 miles north of Inverness, the school offers courses lasting one or two weeks for adventurous students aged 11 to 70. Children's courses vary according to the age group and special courses are held for women.

They are accommodated in a Norwegian-style timber bunkhouse with three separate dormitories, dining-recreation room, hot showers and a drying room. Meals are eaten outdoors, weather permitting. There are no newspapers, television or radio.

"The object is not to exhaust people but to allow them to expand against this unique background," says Ridgway. "Safety is never ignored, with an instructor-pupil ratio of one to six or better. The main experience is a direct contact between the individual and the real world which he lives in, yet seldom sees."

Ridgway, 35, was a member of the Parachute Regiment when he and a fellow-paratrooper rowed from the United States to Ireland in 1966.

He also sailed single-handed from Ireland to Brazil and led the first expedition to follow the Amazon 4,000 miles from its source in the Peruvian Andes to its mouth on the Atlantic coast.

He said the idea of the school occurred to him while he was crossing the Atlantic.

The Towering Inferno was a disaster — but was it also the best picture of the year?

Is Godfather II a better movie than Godfather I?

The Victoria Times and Radio Station CJVI are giving you a chance to predict the top Oscar winners as selected April 8 with the first prize being a CP Air weekend for two in Hollywood, the home of the stars.

Winner of the contest will be drawn from among those who have correctly predicted the winner of best actor, best actress and best movie of the year.

Oscar winners are announced April 8 and the drawing from among the correct entries will take place April 9.

Best Picture: Godfather II, Chinatown, Towering Inferno, The Conversation, Lenny.

Best Actor: Al Pacino as the heir to a gangster empire in Godfather II, Albert Finney for his portrayal of an offbeat sleuth in Murder on the Orient Express, Dustin Hoffman as Lenny Bruce in Lenny, Jack Nicholson as a cynical private detective in Chinatown and Art Carney for Harry and Tonto.

Best Actress: Faye Dunaway for Chinatown, Ellen Burstyn for Alice Doesn't Live Here Any More, Valerie Perrine as the wife of Lenny Bruce in Lenny, Gena Rowlands for A Woman Under The Influence and Diahann Carrol for Claudine.

Favorites in the race for best picture are Godfather II and Chinatown, which each got 11 nominations and Towering Inferno with 8 nominations.

Lenny and The Conversation are regarded as longshots but the final verdict is in the hands of the 3,200 voters of The Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences and the results of the ballot have been quite startling on occasion.

Studio politics always plays a role in the voting and some observers are concerned about a possible split ballot between Godfather II and Chinatown, both by Paramount Pictures, which would permit one of the other three nominees to win in a close vote.

However, both Godfather II and Chinatown have won high critical acclaim.

Godfather II is a personal triumph for filmmaker Francis Ford Coppola who received a record five nominations, including best director. But two of the nominations are for his work in The Conversation, which is a rival to Godfather II in the best picture category.

Lenny, the biography of tough-talking comedian Lenny Bruce, is regarded as another high achievement by Dustin Hoffman, who won an Oscar as best actor in The Graduate.

Sentimental favorite for best actor is Art Carney, who teamed up with Jackie Gleason on television for many years. However, the critics generally have been louder in their praises for the other four onminees.

Al Pacino has the advantage of being the featured player in Godfather II, which has been a winner at the box office.

Nicholson and Finney have been nominated before. Nicholson has been nominated for best actor and best supporting actor in years past while Finney gained fame in the title role of Tom Jones, best movie of 1963.

There is no clear favorite in the best actress category and the voting figures to be close. Faye Dunaway, who was nominated for Bonnie and Clyde in 1967, has come up with an even better performance in Chinatown, another winner at the box office.

Gena Rowlands has won extravagant praise from some critics for A Woman Under The Influence but Ellen Burstyn, Valerie Perrins and Diahann Carrol have also been mentioned prominently by the critics.

Two years ago The Godfather swept the boards.

The Times-CJVI contest is not open to employees of the two companies or their immediate families.

GROWN MEN WEEP

Fear and Despair Mount in Saigon

By PHILIP McCOMBS
Washington Post

SAIGON — There is despair, fear and outrage here. People are hoarding rice and packing their belonging to flee, they don't know where or when. Grown men are weeping.

There are no firm indications Saigon itself will soon be attacked. But people and officials here are shocked into numbness by the vast magnitude of what has happened to their country.

"When my dad heard about the abandonment of the highlands, he broke down weeping," said a secretary. "He told me the last time he wept was when the country was partitioned in 1954."

The movement of refugees out of the highlands and in the extreme northern part of the country is of Biblical proportions, almost beyond mental grasp. It seems almost everyone here has some relative, somewhere, to worry about.

So far only a trickle of these refugees has reached Saigon, but people here are desperately concerned about what can happen if that trickle becomes a flood, and if the flood is accompanied by possible defeated and unruly government soldiers.

People are also concerned that if roads to Saigon from the Mekong Delta food-growing region are cut off in the next few weeks, food shortages could rapidly develop here that might lead to civil disorder.

Even so, Saigon seems to be considered the best place to be right now.

"I brought my family down from Da Lat," said one man. "To tell the truth, if I thought the (National Liberation) Front would take over in one clean sweep, I would have stayed. What concerns me is the interim period — the period of disorder when there is no government."

In Saigon near midnight Thursday night, a policeman stopped a Western diplomat and extorted 2,000 piasters (about $3).

"It was right in the middle of the downtown area," said another diplomat, "and it makes you wonder, doesn't it?"

Some families are buying quantities of rice and storing them in different parts of the city — in case one section of the city becomes unsafe, they think they may be able to live in another near their second or third cache of rice.

Another theory has it, however, that there's no point in

4 CANADIANS $120,000 WINNERS

Four Canadians, three from Ontario and one from Alberta won prizes of about $120,000 each with Irish Hospital Sweepstakes tickets on Southwark Star, winner of today's Lincolnshire Handicap in Doncaster, England.

Two Canadians won about $48,000 on second-place Flying Nelly and four Canadians won about $24,000 each with tickets on Dawlish, who finished third.

$36,430 For Lauk Deputies

The appointment of two associate deputy ministers to the department of economic development in the provincial government was announced Friday.

Jack McKeown will head the business and industrial development branch and J. R. Meredith will assume responsibilities of senior policy adviser to Economic Development Minister Gary Lauk.

Salary listed for each position is $36,430.

The appointments follow provisions for a second associate deputy approved in cabinet orders released Friday, and the resignation of former associate deputy Les Hempsall last month.

Also announced Friday was the appointment of Ronald F. Bone as vice-chairman of the Labor Relations Board, a $36,430 salary position.

'ENLIGHTENMENT' FOR VICTORIA

About 200 people turned out to The Empress hotel Friday night for a symposium marking "the dawn of the age of enlightenment."

The what?

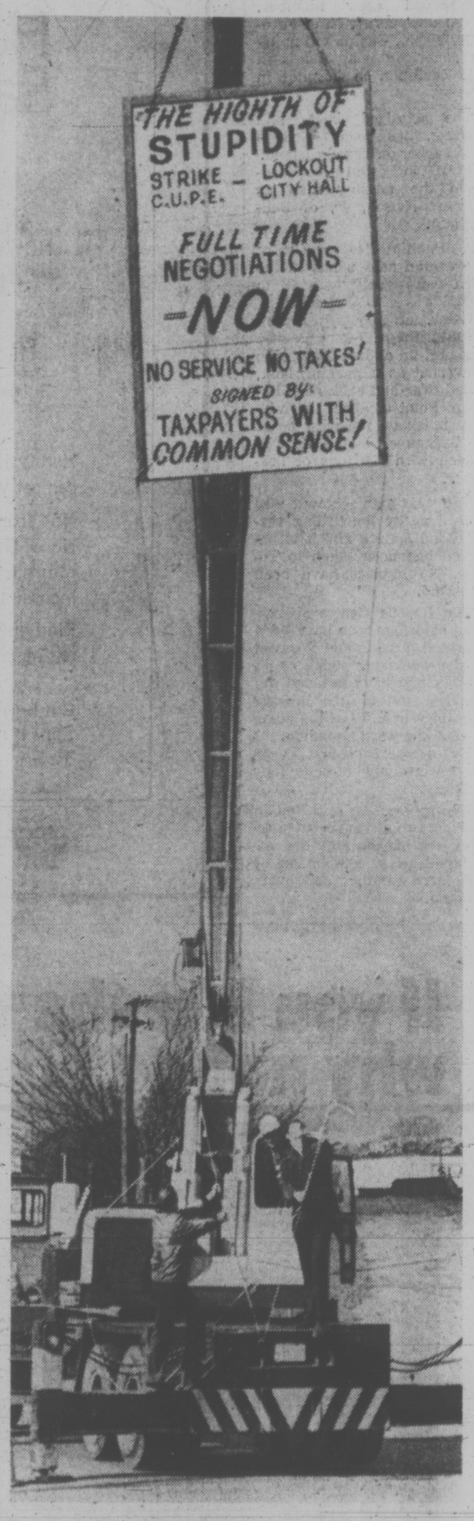
POWER OUT

A high-flying swan, apparently with bad eyesight, flew into a power line on Carey Road this morning, causing a power failure in the Royal Oak area of Saanich.

The impact of the swan shorted the power line and B.C. Hydro crews were called out to restore electricity. Power was off in Royal Oak for about an hour.



Sign Says It All

A big sign hoisted high on a crane at one end of the Johnson Street bridge today likely said it all for a lot of taxpayers.

In bold letters it called for continuous bargaining "NOW" to settle the strike-lockout which has idled 1,800 civic employees and crippled the Greater Victoria school system.

It was signed: "Taxpayers with Common Sense."

"There are no sides being taken," said Robert Gillespie, one of the sign organizers, "we just want full negotiations — now."

No talks are scheduled in the eight-week dispute.

The bridge, which is raised and likely to remain so over the weekend, is one visible aspect of disruptions the contract fight has produced.

"They're like little kids — one saying 'I want it up' and the other saying 'I want it down'," said a disgusted Gillespie.

"This nonsense should stop," said Karl Fritz, whose firm provided the crane to raise the giant sign high over the harbor.

City police told the organizers they would have to move the 25-ton crane and sign by 11 a.m.

Meanwhile, another irate city resident feels the city of Victoria is trying to "squeeze an extra two bits" out of city taxpayers by ticketing cars in city parkades.

Mrs. Terry Balla of Mary's Patio Grill on Johnson Street parked her car in the Johnson Street parkade Friday without buying the 25-cent permit.

She said today she has been parking there without a permit for the past two weeks and no one bothered her, but when she got back to her car Friday she found a $2 parking ticket on her windshield.

"I just don't feel like paying that 25 cents for the permit. We have enough to put up with without city hall trying to squeeze an extra two bits out of us."

"Businesses downtown have had to pay a fortune to have their garbage hauled away, money that we won't get off our taxes and now city hall is moving in and giving tickets to cars just to get their 25 cents," Mrs. Balla said.

PSAC Disruptions Just a Beginning?

OTTAWA (CP) — The strikes by federal blue-collar workers that disrupted postal, air and grain-shipping services may have only given the public a small taste of industrial strife to come in the next few months.

With a number of crucial agreements about to expire or now in the process of renegotiation, the potential exists for many more weeks of strikes in those services.

There still is a chance that more walkouts by the 18,600-member general labor and trades group will occur, despite the tentative agreement reached Wednesday between the Public Service Alliance and the government after a month of selective strikes.

Although alliance leaders hope for ratification of this week's settlement, there has been widespread opposition expressed among union members and the vote is expected to be close.

In Winnipeg, members of PSAC today rejected the proposed contract by an 81-percent majority. A spokesman for the local members said the vote was 158 to 37 against the proposed settlement with the federal treasury board.

But even if the dispute involving the laborers and tradesmen is finished, there remains the likelihood of walkouts by letter carriers and postal clerks and the possibility of strikes by airport firefighters, airline machinists, longshoremen and grain handlers.

Conciliation hearings in the contract dispute between 16,000 letter carriers and the treasury board, the government's collective bargaining arm, began Friday with the two sides far apart on wages, the main issue.

The letter carriers want a $2.50-an-hour raise while the treasury board has offered $1.15 in stages over four years. The workers now earn $4.44 an hour after three years service.

Should the parties fail to reach an agreement, a strike could come within a month.

The 22,000 inside postal workers, including mail sorters and clerks, are just beginning negotiations but an atmosphere of militancy and hostility between the union and government prevent an easy solution to that dispute.

A strike by the postal workers could come in the next two months.

Contracts for 1,470 airport firefighters, who held illegal strikes last spring, end March 31. Walkouts by those employees who are Public Ser-

★ P.O. LOSS SOARS

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office deficit more than doubled to $177.2 million in 1973-74 despite increased revenue of $28 million, it was reported Friday.

The annual report for the year ended March 31, 1974, said total revenue rose five per cent to $591 million but costs shot up to $768.3 million, an increase of $114.2 million over the previous year.

The report was filed Friday in the Commons by Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey.

It said rising salaries accounted for $83.8 million of the cost increase. Transportation costs rose $13.7 million and spending on machinery and equipment went up $17.6 million.

★ Social Unrest On Way: CLC

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Labor Congress predicts that social unrest will continue in the coming 12 months, fuelled by high inflation and unemployment in a stagnant economy.

The 1.9-million-member labor group, in its annual brief to the federal cabinet, calls on the government to respond to the economic situation with increased tax reductions to low and middle-income Canadians.

The 20,000-word brief, to be presented Monday to Prime Minister Trudeau and members of his cabinet, says there is a strong possibility the country will have an inflation rate of about 12 per cent accompanied by an unemployment rate of seven per cent in the coming year.

The congress said the wages of all workers, both organized and unorganized, should be fully indexed in relation to increases in the consumer price index.

It predicted virtually no real increase in economic growth in the next 12 months and a continuation in the decline of exports.

The labor body reiterated its support for a form of guaranteed annual income but said it should not replace social insurance programs such as unemployment insurance and government pension plans.

"The integration of unemployment insurance into a one-shot social security scheme as envisaged by some advocates of the guaranteed annual income would be, in our view, a mistake," the brief said.

NDP Out to Destroy VSE: President

VANCOUVER (CP) — Relations between the Vancouver investment industry and B.C.'s NDP government appear to be reaching the boiling point.

In a strongly-worded statement Friday, Vancouver Stock Exchange president Cyril White said:

"I am satisfied that the attorney-general (Alex Macdonald) is attempting to destroy the Vancouver Stock Exchange as part of the objectives of the 1969 Waffle manifesto, to which both he and Premier Barrett subscribed."

White was referring to the document issued by a group of left-wing New Democrats (the Waffle group), which called for a restoration "radical socialism" in the NDP, national planning of investment and public ownership of the means of production in Canada.

"Why don't they (the NDP government) be honest and admit what they are doing, instead of maligning the VSE in shotgun attacks? I am becoming scared about what's going on here," White said.

The VSE president was reacting to statement attributed earlier in the week to Macdonald, who criticized the "Monte Carlo goings-on."

Responding to the attorney-general's statement that some of the junior stocks on the VSE are not "legitimate ventures for the public to invest in," White said:

"More than 90 per cent of the stocks listed on the VSE since the NDP has formed the government were first approved by the attorney-general's department. I'm talking about the former interim listings and over-the-counter stocks that are now fully listed or make up the curb exchange."

White also took exception to Macdonald's statement that he had appointed the VSE's two public governors (David Huberman and Peter Stanley) to a listing committee and that they would report both to Macdonald and the BSE.

He said that Huberman and Stanley represent the public at large, not the attorney-general, on the BSE's board of governors. "They cannot report both to the VSE and the attorney-general — for Mr. Macdonald to suggest otherwise is shocking," he said.

Young Student Saw The Light When School Day Cut Short

max low

Bored because the CUPE strike has left you with a short school day?

Well, kids, there are plenty of things you can do to relieve the boredom.

Smash up a few phone boxes; hang around a few street corners.

Why, just the other day there was a group of youngsters playing ball across Yates Street, a little below Douglas, lobbing it back and forth just over the tops of the rush-hour cars from one sidewak to the other.

Quite harmless, I suppose. But also quite useless. And a bit of a nuisance as well.

Those are a few suggestions. And then there's young Hilary Wharf and her friend Sharon Stewart. They knew what to do with their time.

Hilary is 13 and a student at Central Junior High School—that is, she was a full-time student when the Canadian Union of Public Employees wasn't picketing the place. Right now she attends for two hours a day between 8:40 a.m. and 10:40 a.m. She admits she's bored.

"In some ways it's kind of dumb going at all," Hilary says, "because we're not learning anything, we're just repeating what we already know."

And so she looked for something that wasn't "kind of dumb."

Hilary went to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind on Blanshard Street and offered her services. Now each afternoon she hops on a bus near her Dallas Road home and travels across the city to spend her time with blind children.

One day, Hilary plays with four-year-old Timmy Black or takes him for walks in the park.

"He has such a great imagination," she says with warmth.

And the next day she visits Tricia Stephens, who has been blind and physically handicapped since her birth two and-a-half years ago.

Hilary "just talks" to Tricia but she also helps Tricia's mother, Diane Stephens, who runs a day-care centre in her Esquimalt home.

And now, after doing this for a few weeks, Hilary has a helper in 13-year-old schoolmate Sharon, who lives on Richardson Street.

Sharon, born in Toronto and living in Victoria for only the last two years, has had plenty of experience helping her mother, who runs a rest home. And, when she found out what Hilary was doing, Sharon pestered her until she agreed to take her along, too.

Hilary has already had quite a bit of experience in helping others, also. She was born in Victoria and moved back here just over a year ago after her family lived in Edmonton for a while.

"My mother used to volunteer work with cerebral palsy patients and I helped her," says Hilary. "But I was particularly interested in working with blind people and not long before I left Edmonton I contacted the CNIB, but they said I was too young." She was 11 at the time.

Hilary isn't sure yet what path her life will take.

"I might like to take up social work," she says. "My uncle Brian Wharf, sho's at McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario, has been appointed to head the new social work department which opens this fall at UVic."

"But I don't know," she adds with her eyes widening. "There's so much to choose from."

You get an overwhelming feeling that Hilary Wharf is a woman, really, not a girl. She seems so intelligent, so grown up. Perhaps even a little to grown up. And yet she giggles a lot, makes little remarks to Sharon, and blushes often as you ask her things.

You can tell that Isabel Beveridge, district administtator for the CNIB, is delighted with Hilary.

"She's an amazingly mature, sensitive girl," says Miss Beveridge. "She's very responsible. Like, I mean she phones after each assignment and lets us know how things went. And she phoned to make an appointment with me to bring her friend Sharon in—things you'd like an adult volunteer to do."

This is the first time the CNIB here has had such young volunteers although in summer holidays of other years there have been students aged about 15 or 16 helping out.

But Miss Beveridge doesn't want a flood of youthful applicants.

"We aren't able to handle a lot of students as I don't have time to administer them," she explains.

Neither Hilary nor Sharon know of any other students who are doing this kind of work during the strike.

Apart from the CNIB, there must be plenty of other avenues where youthful exuberance and all that time could be put to good use. And there probably are many young people helping out already in various ways. There must be.

If there aren't, there should be.

Bus Service Assured For Month

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Residents of the Happy Valley, Metchosin and Rocky Point areas will continue to have a bus service operated by South West Coach Lines Ltd. for at least another month.

Nearly 50 of them who attended a public hearing Friday called by the B.C. Motor Carrier Commission were told by chairman Paul Sabatino it will probably take that long for commissioners to hand down a decision on the company's application to discontinue service to those areas.

And until then, South West — which claimed during the hearing that it is losing about $70 a day in serving the poorly-patronized rural route — will be required to maintain the run.

Among the petitions and submissions presented during the four-hour hearing, perhaps the strongest criticism of South West's operation and management came from James Golightly, former owner of the company who remained on as manager for one year after he sold it to Watson and Ash to Courtenay in October, 1973.

Golightly claimed in his brief that the declining revenue on the Happy Valley-Metchosin-Rocky Point route was largely due to inferior, unreliable service.

"South West's service in the Metchosin area is exemplified by, among other things, failure of the bus to run when it suits (the company's) convenience to cancel it," he said.

"No need to cover the service, apparently; they're only passengers standing out in the rain waiting to get to work. The buses have been observed running as early as 10 minutes ahead of schedule, and as late as 15 minutes behind.

"Surely there can be no question why the passengers have deserted. The only question is how they (South West) are still able to eke $20 per day from the run."

Golightly charged that the company's buses are "filthy" — two of them had not been washed for seven weeks and showed little sign of inside cleaning — while its "abysmal understanding of maintenance" leads to major breakdowns because simple adjustments and repairs are neglected.

He predicted that South West would also apply in due course to eliminate its runs to Langford and Sooke, where "the same shoddy service is evident."

If the company could not or would not provide a reasonable service its licence, including charter rights, should be revoked and awarded to a competent operator, Golightly argued.

Most objectors at the hearing strongly criticized the present standard of service provided, and claimed that many more people would use the buses if they ran to a reasonably frequent and reliable schedule, providing arrival times in the city to coincide with regular office and business hours.

They expressed concern that almost the entire western community — one of Greater Victoria's fastest-growing areas, with a population of more than 20,000 — would be left without any form of public transportation if the application were approved.

Particularly hard-hit, the commissioners were told, would be many elderly residents, students, housewives in single-car families and those who rely on bus travel for their jobs in the city.

An underlying theme of the hearing was the request that the provincial government extend the capital region transit system into the Colwood-Langford-Metchosin area, but commission chairman Sabatine explained following the hearing that the Motor Carrier Commission can only recommend such a move and has no powers beyond that.

Among the requests for continuation of some form of bus service was one from Jack Mathews, director of the Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific at Pededer Bay.

His letter noted that the 100 students at th college, whose numbers would be doubled by September, need to visit Victoria on a regular basis for study and social services assignments, in addition to social and cultural trips.

As they are not permitted private transportation an attempt is made to meet such needs with the college's own mini-buses, other rented minibuses and private cars.

South West president Leo Richards told the hearing he acquired the company as an extension to a charter-based bus operation has was developing in the Courtenay area.

Richards said South West lost $40,000 last year and its most uneconomic route is the Happy Valley-Metchosin run where average daily revenue had declined from $27.28 in November to $19.50 currently.

Crash knocked pole over fence

Tel Pole Sheared, Man, 24, Injured

A 24-year-old man is in fair condition in Victoria General Hospital after the car he was driving knocked over a parking meter and severed a telephone pole in the 400 block Belleville early this morning.

Victoria police said the impact sent the pole flying through the air. It came to rest, still standing, on the other side of a six-foot wire mesh fence.

The driver, whose name police have not released, received multiple injuries but all a young male passenger sustained was a sprained finger.

Police said the car had just pulled out of the parking lot on the west exit of the Swiftsure Hotel at 1:25 a.m. and accelerating at a high rate of speed went out of control.

There were more than 200 feet of skid marks at the scene, police said.

A spokesman said charges may be pending.

Parent Rally Set Over Curbed Classes

A group of parents are planning to gather at the legislative buildings Tuesday at 1 p.m. to ask Education Minister Eileen Dailly to restore normal classes to Greater Victoria schools.

Tentative date for the demonstration was decided at a parents' meeting Friday at the Community Action Group office, 551½ Fisgard, called by Sharon MacBain of 1679 Kisber, mother of four school-age children.

About 40 people, including several students, attended the meeting.

"Our schools must remain neutral to ensure the kids their stake in education," Mrs. MacBain told the group.

"The education of our children must take priority over all forms of disputes."

She urged those present to contact all the parents they could before Tuesday so there would be a good turnout at the demonstration.

Some action must be taken before the Easter recess of the legislature next week, said Mrs. MacBain.

"We have to act fast and we have to act strong," she said.

She suggested that the unemployed might be used to clean the schools while school custodians, members of local 382 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, are on strike.

"There are a lot of people who need jobs," she said, "so why can't we use them?"

Parent volunteers have been cleaning schools in the district for two weeks, and the schools have been operating one to three hours daily.

Several other people took up her suggestion, saying that human resources incentive workers might clean the schools.

"Unfortunately there are labor laws against strike-breaking and that would be considered strikebreaking," said one woman, who wouldn't give her name.

A school secretary, a member of CUPE local 947 that has been locked out by Greater Victoria school board, pointed out that of 1,550 people now off work in the Capital Region, only 492 are on strike.

The rest are locked out by their employers, said the woman, who wouldn't give her name.

She asked parents to consider the wisdom of keeping the schools functioning by volunteering to clean them.

"We've had it from top authorities in the school board that as long as the volunteers go in and clean there's no reason to settle," she said.

"They're prepared to be out till the end of April." "The legislature can't help you," she said.

"You go to your municipal leaders and ask them why they've locked people out."

Mrs. MacBain said she hoped the demonstration wouldn't favor one side or the other in the labor dispute.

"We're not against anybody and we're not picking on anybody," she said.

Another woman said she opposed all strikes.

"I'm against any form of legalized blackmail and I don't care who's doing it," she said.

Lill Henderson, a mother who said she's been cleaning schools twice a week as a volunteer, said mothers she's talked to want normal school hours restored but not "at the cost of what the CUPE people are asking for."

Mediaeval Inn Open Again

The Mediaeval Inn, 1005 Broad Street, is back in business.

The inn re-opened quietly a week ago after being closed since Jan. 4 because of a labor dispute which had been brewing for almost two years.

The inn was closed after the Labor Relations Board imposed a first contract for employees represented by Local 835 of the Beverage Dispensers' and Culinary Workers' Union.

Manager John MacCarvill said earlier the inn could not afford to pay the wages set out in the contract. The contract provided wages of $2.75 an hour for waitresses plus 17 or 18 per cent for fringe benefits.

Mediaeval employees are still represented by the union, but it is not known what agreement led to the inn re-opening.

The restaurant has been open only for lunch this week but will go into an evening meal schedule as well on Tuesday.

Ulla Spech, a former inn hostess and spokesman for the employees who were against union represenation, said today she has not gone back to work.

"All the union people are there and those who don't want to have anything to do with the union aren't there," she said.

Officials of the inn were not available for comment.

No Rush To Polls

Voter turnout was light this monring as Esquimalt voters went to the polls in a municipal byelection to choose a new alderman.

Teh poll, in the recreation centre at 527 Fraser Street, opened at 8 a.m. today and will close at 8 p.m.

Voters must choose from eight candidates on the ballot.

Driver Killed By Cab

Mrs. Diane Tremeer, 3254 Alder, a driver for family-owned Royal Oak taxi, had just picked up an elderly male passenger in the James Bay Lodge, 336 Simcoe, and was walking behind her cab when it suddenly accelerated in reverse.

It thrust her backward about 60 feet into part of a wall and through a window of the lodge. She was killed instantly.

Victoria police were unable to offer any explanation for the freak accident.

The fatality was the third in Greater Victoria in the past two days.

On Thursday Jose Cabrita, 45, of 644 Baxter, and his father Yaaguim Cabrita, 75, of Portugal, were killed when their small car collided head-on with a gravel truck on Prospect Lake Road in Saanich.

Irish Poet With an American Twang at UVic

By KIT COLLINS
Times Staff

Back in the early 60s Dubliner James J. McAuley decided to stop slaving for a monthly publication which dealt with the idiosyncracies of electricity.

He headed for America where universities hired writers by the dozens to perambulate around campuses in offbeat clothing and add a touch of intelligentia to the curriculum—or that's how the myth went.

Some 12 years later McAuley, a visiting "Irish" poet at University of Victoria's creative writing department, exudes as much Irish culture as a shamrock nurtured on Arkansas soil.

"I haven't got the passionate chauvinism Irish men are known for—and I've no special message for the Irish anymore."

The problem is that 80 per cent of the writers lack the main ingredient of fame they're still alive, says McAuley, estimating that a large following is only 500.

The financial benefits of the profession are just as minimal. The poet has hads five collections of poems published for royalties at maximum of $2,000.

So why struggle with the profession?

"I have to write and I have to see it in print. Private writing is a meaningless act."

Financing the art usually means sidelining in the teaching profession. McAuley is head of the creative writing program at East Washington State College, a post he moved to from his first American turf. "And I'm glad to say the program is thriving.

He's had a hand in moulding only half a dozen brilliant writers—"people who will amount to something"—but hopefully he's at least initiated an appreciation in students for the art of writing.

Poems, he says, are never finshed. They're abandoned, like kids; you can't raise them any further.

His efforts, published in a variety of journals including the Malahat Review, are dotted with a few obsessions including flight, domesticity and the daily trivia of the household.

"You peel a poem like an onion," says McAuley. "It's designed to be a reflection of its own time."

The publishing market, much to McAuley's discontent, is swamped with how-to do-it books, a reflection of the red-neck mentality in the States that is strangely anti-intellectual.

There's proportionately more appreciation in Canada, he says.

But, back to Ireland.

Ireland is like a Catholic convent with unmatchable rules and regulations to stifle the artist.

If prompted, he'll offer a long harangue on the Irish Civil war; the industrial carpetbaggers, "my kinsman Michael Collins," the double-crosses and his mistake in marrying, and then divorcing, an Irish colleen whose persistence has followed him across the country.

There's bitternesss too. Although it surfaced in just one work—After the Blizzard, currently being re-written—the reaction ultimately moved the writer to follow myths across the ocean where "streets were paved with gold."

So much for the American twang.

You, Too, Can Be a Winner in This Year's Oscars!

The Towering Inferno was a disaster — but was it also the best picture of the year?

Is Godfather II a better movie than Godfather I?

The Victoria Times and Radio Station CJVI are giving you a chance to predict the top Oscar winners as selected April 8 with the first prize being a CP Air weekend for two in Hollywood, the home of the stars.

Winner of the contest will be drawn from among those who have correctly predicted the winner of best actor, best actress and best movie of the year.

Oscar winners are announced April 8 and the drawing from among the correct entries will take place April 9.

Best Picture: Godfather II, Chinatown, Towering Inferno, The Conversation, Lenny.

Best Actor: Al Pacino as the heir to a gangster empire in Godfather II, Albert Finney for his portrayal of an offbeat sleuth in Murder on the Orient Express, Dustin Hoffman as Lenny Bruce in Lenny, Jack Nicholson as a cynical private detective in Chinatown and Art Carney for Harry and Tonto.

Best Actress: Faye Dunaway for Chinatown, Ellen Burstyn for Alice Doesn't Live Here Any More, Valerie Perrine as the wife of Lenny Bruce in Lenny, Gena Rowlands for A Woman Under The Influence and Diahann Carrol for Claudine.

Favorites in the race for best picture are Godfather II and Ghinatown, which each got 11 nominations and Towering Inferno with 8 nominations.

Lenny and The Conversation are regarded as longshots but the final verdict is in the hands of the 3,200 voters of The Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences and the results of the ballot have been quite startling on occasion.

Studio politics always plays a role in the voting and some observers are concerned about a possible split ballot between Godfather II and Chinatown, both by Paramount Pictures, which would permit one of the other three nominees to win in a close vote.

However, both Godfather II and Chinatown have won high critical acclaim.

Godfather II is a personal triumph for filmmaker Francis Ford Coppola who received a record five nominations, including best director. But two of the nominations are for his work in The Conversation, which is a rival to Godfather II in the best picture category.

Lenny, the biography of tough-talking comedian Lenny Bruce, is regarded as another high achievement by Dustin Hoffman, who won an Oscar as best actor in The Graduate.

Sentimental favorite for best actor is Art Carney, who teamed up with Jackie Gleason on television for many years. However, the critics generally have been louder in their praises for the other four nominees.

Al Pacino has the advantage of being the featured player in Godfather II, which has been a winner at the box office.

Nicholson and Finney have been nominated before. Nicholson has been nominated for best actor and best supporting actor in years past while Finney gained fame in the title role of Tom Jones, best movie of 1963.

There is no clear favorite in the best actress category and the voting figures to be close. Faye Dunaway, who was nominated for Bonnie and Clyde in 1967, has come up with an even better performance in Chinatown, another winner at the box office.

Gena Rowlands has won extravagant praise from some critics for A Woman Under The Influence but Ellen Burstyn, Valerie Perrine and Diahann Carrol have also been mentioned prominently by the critics.

Two years ago The Godfather swept the boards.

The Times-CJVI contest is not open to employees of the two companies or their immediate families.

GROWN MEN WEEP

Fear and Despair Mount in Saigon

By PHILIP McCOMBS
Washington Post

SAIGON — There is despair, fear and outrage here. People are hoarding rice and packing their belonging to flee, they don't know where or when. Grown men are weeping.

There are no firm indications Saigon itself will soon be attacked. But people and officials here are shocked into numbness by the vast magnitude of what has happened to their country.

"When my dad heard about the abandonment of the highlands, he broke down weeping," said a secretary. "He told me the last time he wept was when the country was partitioned in 1954."

The movement of refugees out of the highlands and in the extreme northern part of the country is of Biblical proportions, almost beyond mental grasp. It seems almost everyone here has some relative, somewhere, to worry about.

So far only a trickle of these refugees has reached Saigon, but people here are desperately concerned about what can happen if that trickle becomes a flood, and if the flood is accompanied by possible defeated and unruly government soldiers.

People are also concerned that if roads to Saigon from the Mekong Delta food-growing region are cut off in the next few weeks, food shortages could rapidly develop here that might lead to civil disorder.

Even so, Saigon seems to be considered the best place to be right now.

"I brought my family down from Da Lat," said one man. "To tell the truth, if I thought the (National Liberation) Front would take over in one clean sweep, I would have stayed. What concerns me is the interim period — the period of disorder when there is no government."

In Saigon near midnight Thursday night, a policeman stopped a Western diplomat and extorted 2,000 piasters (about $3).

"It was right in the middle of the downtown area," said another diplomat, "and it makes you wonder, doesn't it?"

Some families are buying quantities of rice and storing them in different parts of the city — in case one section of the city becomes unsafe, they think they may be able to live in another near their second or third cache of rice.

Another theory has it, however, that there's no point in

POWER OUT

A high-flying swan, apparently with bad eyesight, flew into a power line on Carey Road this morning, causing a power failure in the Royal Oak area of Saanich.

The impact of the swan, which died, shorted the power line and B.C. Hydro crews were called out to restore electricity. Power was off in Royal Oak for about an hour.

PSAC Disruptions Just a Beginning?

OTTAWA (CP) — The strikes by federal blue-collar workers that disrupted postal, air and grain-shipping services may have only given the public a small taste of industrial strife to come in the next few months.

With a number of crucial agreements about to expire or now in the process of renegotiation, the potential exists for many more weeks of strikes in those services.

There still is a chance that more walkouts by the 18,600-member general labor and trades group will occur, despite the tentative agreement reached Wednesday between the Public Service Alliance and the government after a month of selective strikes.

Although alliance leaders hope for ratification of this week's settlement, there has been widespread opposition expressed among union members and the vote is expected to be close.

In Winnipeg, members of PSAC today rejected the proposed contract by an 81-per-cent majority. A spokesman for the local members said the vote was 158 to 37 against the proposed settlement with the federal treasury board.

But even if the dispute involving the laborers and tradesmen is finished, there remains the likelihood of walkouts by letter carriers and postal clerks and the possibility of strikes by airport firefighters, airline machinists, longshoremen and grain handlers.

Conciliation hearings in the contract dispute between 16,000 letter carriers and the treasury board, the government's collective bargaining arm, began Friday with the two sides far apart on wages, the main issue.

The letter carriers want a $2.50-an-hour raise while the treasury board has offered $1.15 in stages over four years. The workers now earn $4.44 an hour after three years service.

Should the parties fail to reach an agreement, a strike could come within a month.

The 22,000 inside postal workers, including mail sorters and clerks, are just beginning negotiations but an atmosphere of militancy and hostility between the union and government prevent an easy solution to that dispute.

A strike by the postal workers could come in the next two months.

Contracts for 1,470 airport firefighters, who held illegal strikes last spring, end March 31. Walkouts by those employees who are Public Ser-

4 CANADIANS $120,000 WINNERS

Four Canadians, three from Ontario and one from Alberta won prizes of about $120,000 each with Irish Hospital Sweepstakes tickets on Southwark Star, winner of today's Lincolnshire Handicap in Doncaster, England.

Two Canadians won about $48,000 on second-place Flying Nelly and four Canadians won about $24,000 each with tickets on Dawlish, who finished third.

$36,430 For Lauk Deputies

The appointment of two associate deputy ministers to the department of economic development in the provincial government was announced Friday.

Jack McKeown will head the business and industrial development branch and J. R. Meredith will assume responsibilities of senior policy adviser to Economic Development Minister Gary Lauk.

Salary listed for each position is $36,430.

Also announced Friday was the appointment of Ronald F. Bone as vice-chairman of the Labor Relations Board, a $36,430 salary position.

Bone formerly was registrar for the board.

Diver Lost

Victoria police said the man, as yet unidentified, was diving alone at the time and had left his partner sitting on the shore. The partner told police the man surfaced once about 40 feet offshore, hollered for help and then slipped back into the water and disappeared.

Police said the partner dived into the water to try to retrieve the man but was unsuccessful.

Sign Says It All

A big sign hoisted high on a crane at one end of the Johnson Street bridge today likely said it all for a lot of taxpayers.

In bold letters it called for continuous bargaining "NOW" to settle the strike-lockout which has idled 1,800 civic employees and crippled the Greater Victoria school system.

It was signed: "Taxpayers with Common Sense."

"There are no sides being taken," said Robert Gillespie, one of the sign organizers, "we just want full negotiations — now."

No talks are scheduled in the eight-week dispute.

The bridge, which is raised and likely to remain so over the weekend, is one visible aspect of disruptions the contract fight has produced.

"They're like little kids — one saying 'I want it up' and the other saying 'I want it down'," said a disgusted Gillespie.

"This nonsense should stop," said Karl Fritz, whose firm provided the crane to raise the giant sign high over the harbor.

City police told the organizers they would have to move the 25-ton crane and sign by 11 a.m.

Meanwhile, another irate city resident feels the city of Victoria is trying to "squeeze an extra two bits" out of city taxpayers by ticketing cars in city parkades.

Mrs. Terry Balla of Mary's Patio Grill on Johnson Street parked her car in the Johnson Street parkade Friday without buying the 25-cent permit.

She said today she has been parking there without a permit for the past two weeks and no one bothered her, but when she got back to her car Friday she found a $2 parking ticket on her windshield.

"I just don't feel like paying that 25 cents for the permit. We have enough to put up with without city hall trying to squeeze an extra two bits out of us."

"Businesses downtown have had to pay a fortune to have their garbage hauled away, money that we won't get off our taxes and now city hall is moving in and giving tickets to cars just to get their 25 cents," Mrs. Balla said.

P.O. LOSS SOARS

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office deficit more than doubled to $177.2 million in 1973-74 despite increased revenue of $28 million, it was reported Friday.

The annual report for the year ended March 31, 1974, said total revenue rose five per cent to $591 million but costs shot up to $768.3 million, an increase of $114.2 million over the previous year.

The report was filed Friday in the Commons by Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey.

It said rising salaries accounted for $83.8 million of the cost increase. Transportation costs rose $13.7 million and spending on machinery and equipment went up $17.6 million.

Social Unrest On Way: CLC

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Labor Congress predicts that social unrest will continue in the coming 12 months, fuelled by high inflation and unemployment in a stagnant economy.

The 1.9-million-member labor group, in its annual brief to the federal cabinet, calls on the government to respond to the economic situation with increased tax reductions to low and middle-income Canadians.

The 20,000-word brief, to be presented Monday to Prime Minister Trudeau and members of his cabinet, says there is a strong possibility the country will have an inflation rate of about 12 per cent accompanied by an unemployment rate of seven per cent in the coming year.

The congress said the wages of all workers, both organized and unorganized, should be fully indexed in relation to increases in the consumer price index.

It predicted virtually no real increase in economic growth in the next 12 months and a continuation in the decline of exports.

The labor body reiterated its support for a form of guaranteed annual income but said it should not replace social insurance programs such as unemployment insurance and government pension plans.

"The integration of unemployment insurance into a one-shot social security scheme as envisaged by some advocates of the guaranteed annual income would be, in our view, a mistake," the brief said.

Peace Bid Dead

ASWAN (UPI — Egypt announced today the failure of U.S. secretory of state Henry Kissinger's mission to mediate a second stage disengagement with Israel and said the U.S. step-by-step approach to Middle East peace is dead.

NEWS BRIEFS

Biggest Tax Break

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Senate voted 60-29 Friday to give Americans the biggest tax break in history, a $33.1 billion package of tax rebates, payroll withholding reductions, business incentives and social security bonuses intended to help pull the nation out of recession.

The bill now goes to a House-Senate conference to iron out differences with a $19.9 billion House bill. The conference is scheduled to begin Monday.

Snow Strands 800

SAPPORO, Japan (AP) — About 800 passengers spent their second night in stranded trains today after four feet of wet snow paralysed railway services in eastern Hokkaido, the northermost main island of Japan, officials reported. Japan national Railway cancelled 129 trains and reported 13 were stranded.

NDP Out to Destroy VSE: President

VANCOUVER (CP) — Relations between the Vancouver investment industry and the B.C. government appear to be reaching the boiling point.

In a strongly-worded statement Friday, Vancouver Stock Exchange president Cyril White said:

"I am satisfied that the attorney-general (Alex Macdonald) is attempting to destroy the Vancouver Stock Exchange as part of the objectives of the 1969 Waffle manifesto, to which both he and Premier Barrett subscribed."

White was referring to the document issued by a group of left-wing New Democrats (the Waffle group), which called for a restoration of "radical socialism" in the NDP, national planning of investment and public ownership of the means of production in Canada.

"Why don't they (the NDP government) be honest and admit what they are doing, instead of maligning the VSE in shotgun attacks? I am becoming scared about what's going on here," White said.

The VSE president was reacting to statement attributed earlier in the week to Macdonald, who criticized the "Monte Carlo goings-on."

Responding to the attorney-general's statement that some of the junior stocks on the VSE are not "legitimate ventures for the public to invest in," White said:

"More than 90 per cent of the stocks listed on the VSE since the NDP has formed the government were first approved by the attorney-general's department. I'm talking about the former interim listings and over-the-counter stocks that are now fully listed or make up the curb exchange."

White also took exception to Macdonald's statement that he had appointed the VSE's two public governors (David Huberman and Peter Stanley) to a listing committee and that they would report both to Macdonald and the VSE.

He said that Huberman and Stanley represent the public at large, not the attorney-general, on the VSE's board of governors. "They cannot report both to the VSE and the attorney-general — for Mr. Macdonald to suggest otherwise is shocking," he said.
